100 córdobas=£5.17=$9.95.

Note: In July 1955 the central exchange rate was fixed at U.S. $1=7.00 córdobas (1 córdoba=14.286 U.S. cents). The market rate was set at $1=7.0263 córdobas (1 córdoba=14.232 U.S. cents). These rates remained in effect until April 1979, despite two devaluations of the U.S. dollar (in December 1971 and February 1973). In terms of sterling, the central rate was £1=16.80 córdobas from November 1967 to August 1971; and £1=18.24 córdobas from December 1971 to June 1972. The córdoba was devalued in April 1979, when a new rate of $1=10.05 córdobas was introduced. The Central American peso (C.A.$), used for transactions within the Central American Common Market, is at par with the United States dollar.

THE CONSTITUTION

Shortly after taking office on July 20th, 1979, the Government of National Reconstruction abrogated the 1974 Constitution. On August 22nd, 1979, the revolutionary junta issued a Bill of Rights guaranteeing the basic freedoms of the individual, religious freedom and freedom of the press, and abolishing the death penalty. The intention of the Bill was to re-establish formally rights which had been violated under the Somoza regime. A fundamental Statute took effect from July 20th, 1980, and will remain in force until the Council of State has drafted a political constitution and proposed an electoral law. Elections are scheduled for 1985.

NIGER

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of the Niger is a landlocked state in West Africa, with Algeria and Libya to the north and Nigeria and Benin to the south. Mali and Upper Volta lie to the west and Chad to the east. The climate is hot and dry with an average temperature of 28°C (84°F). The official language is French but numerous indigenous languages are used, including Hausa (spoken by half the population), Tuareg, Djerma and Fulani. About 85 per cent of the population are Muslims. Most of the remainder follow traditional beliefs and there is a small Christian minority. The national flag (proportions 8 by 7) is a horizontal tricolour of orange, white and green, the central white stripe being charged with an orange disc. The capital is Niamey.

Recent History

Formerly a part of French West Africa, Niger became a self-governing member of the French Community in December 1958 and was granted independence on August 3rd, 1960. Hamani Diori, Prime Minister since December 1958, became Head of State. He was elected President in November 1960, and re-elected in 1965 and 1970. His one-party Government, having repressed an attempted rebellion in 1963-64, seemed one of the most secure in Africa, and President Diori himself gained considerable international prestige as a spokesman for francophone Africa. He maintained very close links with France, and received aid from Nigeria and Libya. The discovery of uranium in Niger, and its exploitation by France, provided an opportunity for the economic development of the country, but the drought in the Sahel of 1968-74, which affected Niger more severely than any other country, had serious economic and political consequences.

Amidst widespread civil disorder during the drought, and after a four-month education strike, the army staged an almost bloodless coup in April 1974. Diori was arrested, and Lieut.-Col. (later Col.) Seyni Kountché, the Chief of Staff of the Armed Forces, became President. The new military Government suspended the Constitution, dissolved the National Assembly and announced that its main objectives were the elimination of corruption and greater efficiency in dealing with the famine.

The new Government's major preoccupation was planning an economic recovery after the Sahel drought. In the interest of national independence, it obtained the withdrawal of French troops and weakened French control of uranium exploitation. In February 1977 a new co-operation agreement was concluded with France, which was claimed to have eradicated all traces of paternalism in their relations.

In August 1975 the Vice-President of the ruling Supreme Military Council was arrested, along with two other prominent figures, on a charge of plotting to seize power, and in January 1976 the Secretary of State for Information was detained. In March 1976 Major Moussa Bayere, dismissed from the Government in February, led an abortive coup. Nine of those implicated, including Bayere, were subsequently sentenced to death.

In 1977 and 1978, faced with the difficulties of renewed drought, the Government attempted to broaden the basis of its support, and in March 1978 released a number of political prisoners, including senior members of ex-President Diori's administration. In April 1980 ex-President Diori was released from prison. All members of the former administration are now free.

The proportion of army officers in the Government was reduced in December 1977 as the unpopular and corrupt administration was gradually replaced. In September 1978, after a minor reshuffle, civilians outnumbered officers in the Government by 11 to six; further reorganizations took place in September 1979, June 1980, February 1981 and September 1981, when Col. Kountché took over the post of Minister of the Interior. In November 1980 public demonstrations took place in Niamey against the critical attitude of Colonel Gaddafi of Libya towards the Niger Government's treatment of the nomadic populations of the Niger-Libya frontier. In January 1981 Libyan diplomats were expelled from Niger. Libya continued, however, after a temporary suspension, to import a large proportion of Niger's uranium.

Government

Since the military coup of April 1974, Niger has been ruled by a Supreme Military Council of army officers, and by a Council of Ministers appointed by the President.

Defence

Niger's armed forces are on a small scale. In July 1981 there was an army of 2,150 men and paramilitary forces totalling 2,060 men. Arms and equipment come mainly from France. The air force consists of 70 men and a few transport planes.

Economic Affairs

Niger is one of the world's poorest countries. The World Bank estimated its 1979 G.N.P. to be $1,410 million, or $270 per head. The economy is predominantly agricultural; this sector accounted for about 44 per cent of G.D.P. in 1980, and 90 per cent of the people are dependent on agriculture and the raising of livestock, although less than 10 per cent of the land is cultivated. The principal crops are millet, sorghum, cassava and beans. The herds of cattle, sheep and goats are large but often of poor quality. Much of the land is desert, over three-quarters of the country receiving an average annual rainfall of less than 250 mm. Persistent drought and the depredations of pests are the main problems. Niger was very seriously affected by the Sahelian drought in the early 1970s. Livestock herds were drastically reduced, the number of cattle falling from 4.4 million in 1968 to 2.2 million in 1973. In 1976/77 cereal production exceeded domestic requirements for the first time since 1970, but in 1978 there was a deficit of 50,000 tons. In 1979, however, Niger imported a total of only 20,000 tons of foodstuffs, and basic food imports became unnecessary in 1980, when livestock numbers almost reached pre-drought levels and production of the principal crops increased by about 10 per cent, but lack of rainfall again led to a shortage of cereals in 1981. The main cash crop was formerly groundnuts but production has not recovered to the pre-drought level.

Uranium deposits, comprising 200,000 metric tons of proven reserves, were discovered in 1966 at Arlit, in the Air mountains of northern Niger, and production by French interests began in 1971. In 1974 the mines were nationalized and in 1977 a new agreement with France increased Niger's share in their exploitation from 17 to 33 per cent and allowed the Government to set prices, which had been previously dictated by France. In 1978 a second mine was opened at Akouta with Japanese investment. In 1980 Niger was the fifth largest uranium producer in the non-communist world, producing 4,300 metric tons. Revenue from uranium exports enabled a reduction in the tax threshold and a raising of the guaranteed minimum industrial wage in 1977 and 1978. Uranium provided about 75 per cent of Niger's exports by 1980, but a drop in world prices led to a reduction in revenue, from 26,000 million francs CFA in 1979 to a predicted 6,700 million in 1982. Lack of transport facilities hampers development but a "uranium road" between the mines and the capital was completed in 1981. Cassiterite, a tin-bearing mineral, is mined in three locations. Mining of phosphate deposits, estimated at 250 million tons, 151 km. west of Niamey began in 1978, and open-cast mining of coal at Anou Araren, where reserves are estimated to be 5 million tons, started in 1980. Petroleum deposits in the Madama Termit area, north-east of Lake Chad, were discovered in 1978.

Industry is on a small scale and manufacturing and handicrafts accounted for 6.4 per cent of G.D.P. in 1980. In 1982 plans were announced for state investment in industries derived from agricultural produce and in the manufacture of construction materials and agricultural machinery, amounting to some 10,000 million francs CFA by 1985. Plans to reduce dependence on imported energy included the construction of an electricity generating station using local coal, and in 1981 the feasibility of a dam at Kandadji, providing irrigation for over 140,000 hectares and hydroelectricity at 125 MW capacity, was being studied by aid donors. The share of rural development was increased in the 1976-78 plan and maintained in the 1979-83 plan, in an attempt to check the rural exodus. The plan originally envisaged total expenditure of 730,200 million francs CFA, of which just under half comprises private investment in the mining sector and in a sugar refining complex, while state investment concentrates on rural development, social services and transport. Niger depends on foreign aid and investment, particularly from France, and although uranium earnings are a major source of development finance, the fall in uranium prices from 1980 onwards led to an appeal for further foreign aid to meet the requirements of the plan. The fall in prices reduced the annual rate of economic growth from about 15 per cent in 1979 to an estimated 5 per cent in 1981.

Transport and Communications

The construction of two railways is being studied; one to give access to the port of Cotonou, in Benin, and the other to Lomé, in Togo, via Ouagadougou (Upper Volta). Two highways cross the country from east to west and from north to south, giving access to neighbouring countries. In 1980 there were 8,219 km. of main roads, of which 32.5 per cent were paved. Many road extension and improvement schemes are in progress, and a 648-km. "uranium road" from Agadez and Arlit to Tahoua was opened in February 1981. The River Niger is navigable for 300 km. In 1973 a river route between Gaya, in the south of Niger, and Port Harcourt, in Nigeria, was opened, giving access to the sea. The internal airways system is operated by Air Niger. The main international airport is at Niamey. Work on a satellite telecommunications network, financed by France, was due to start in March 1981.

Social Welfare

There is a guaranteed national basic wage. There are two hospitals, 36 departmental medical centres, 116 dispensaries and a number of mobile clinics. In 1981 the country had 118 physicians, one for every 47,000 people. The 1979-83 development plan includes allocations for a further 118 rural dispensaries and 40 clinics and maternity centres, and the expansion of a system of village health teams to give basic treatment.

Education

Education is free but there are insufficient schools; the proportion of children of school age receiving education rose from 13 per cent in 1977 to 17 per cent in 1979. By 1983 it is planned that 25 per cent of Niger's primary-aged children will be in school. A university was opened at Niamey in 1973 and in 1976 the construction of the Islamic University of West Africa began at Say. Scholarships are provided for higher education in France and Senegal.

Tourism

There is an abundance of wild life and hunting is the chief tourist attraction. Lake Chad also provides game fishing. In 1979 there were 17 hotels. Provision has been made in the 1979-83 plan for the extension of tourist facilities, which by 1982 were to increase from 421 to 972 rooms. An international-class hotel of 250 rooms was due to open in Niamey in 1981.

Public Holidays

1982: July 23rd (Id ul Fitr, end of Ramadan), August 3rd (Independence Day), September 29th (Id ul Adha, Feast of the Sacrifice), October 19th (Muslim New Year), December 18th (Republic Day), December 28th (Mouloud, Birth of the Prophet).

1983: January 1st (New Year's Day).

Note: The Christian community in Niger also observes Easter, Whitsun, Ascension Day, Assumption, All Saints' Day and Christmas.

NIGERIA

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Federal Republic of Nigeria is a West African coastal state within the Gulf of Guinea, with Niger to the north, Benin to the west and Cameroon to the south-east. The climate is tropical in the south, with an average temperature of 32°C (90°F) and high humidity. It is drier and semi-tropical in the north. Rainfall reaches more than 380 cm. in parts of the south-east. The official language is English. Hausa, Ibo and Yoruba are the principal languages spoken in the north, east and west respectively. Islam is the main religion in northern and part of western Nigeria. Some of the population follow animist beliefs and about a quarter are Christians. The national flag (proportions 2 by 1) has vertical bands of green, white and green. The capital is Lagos; there are plans to move the capital to Abuja.

Recent History

The British dependencies of Northern and Southern Nigeria were merged in 1914. In 1947 the United Kingdom introduced a new Nigerian constitution, establishing a federal system of government based on three regions: Northern, Eastern and Western. The Federation of Nigeria became independent, within the Commonwealth, on October 1st, 1960. In June 1961 the northern part of the British-administered Trust Territory of Cameroon was incorporated into the Northern Region. Legislation approved in August 1963 created a fourth region by dividing the Western Region. In October 1963 Nigeria became a republic. In January 1966 civil government was brought to an end by the overthrow and death of two Regional Premiers and of the Federal Prime Minister, Alhaji Sir Abubakar Tafawa Balewa. A Supreme Military Council was set up by the Army Commander, Maj.-Gen. Johnson Aguiyi-Ironsi, who proposed to abolish the federal structure and establish a unitary state. Inter-communal violence, in which many Ibos living outside their homeland in the Eastern Region were killed or forced to leave, resulted in dislocation of the country and the breakdown of central authority. Aguiyi-Ironsi was killed in July 1966 and his successor, Lt.-Col. (later Gen.) Yakubu Gowon, revived federalism.

Early in 1967 there was a rapid deterioration in relations between the Federal Government and the Military Governor of the Eastern Region, Lt.-Col. Chukwuemeka Odumegwu-Ojukwu, and in May Ojukwu announced the secession of the Eastern Region and its independence as the Republic of Biafra. War between the Federal Government and Biafra broke out in July 1967 and continued until January 1970, when, after Ojukwu's departure to the Ivory Coast, Biafra surrendered. Meanwhile a 12-state structure proposed by the Federal Government to replace the four regions came into effect in April 1968.

After Biafra's surrender, Gen. Gowon's regime reunited the nation and reconstructed the areas devastated in the civil war. Internal stability and increasing economic prosperity derived from petroleum gave Nigeria an influential voice in African affairs and allowed it to pursue an open foreign policy. After revoking a promise to restore civilian rule by 1976 and failing to curb widespread corruption, Gen. Gowon faced mounting opposition which culminated in his overthrow in a bloodless coup in July 1975. Brigadier (later Gen.) Murtala Ramat Muhammed, formerly Federal Commissioner for Communications, was nominated as Head of State by Nigeria's new military leaders. General Muhammed was killed in an abortive coup in February 1976 and was succeeded as Head of State by Lt.-Gen. Olusegun Obasanjo, Chief of Staff of the armed forces.

In 1975 the Federal Military Government purged the civil service and armed forces and took over the media in an attempt to reduce corruption. A programme to restore democracy and civilian rule by October 1979 was announced. In March 1976 the 12 existing states were replaced by 19 and the decision was taken to build a new, more central, federal capital near Abuja in Niger State. Local government councils were elected at the end of 1976 and a Constituent Assembly (mainly elected by these councils) was formed the following year to debate a new Constitution.

In September 1978 the Constitution was issued and the state of emergency, in force since 1966, was ended. At the same time the 12-year ban on political activity was lifted and by the following January five parties had registered. Federal, State and Presidential elections were held in July and August 1979. In the Federal elections the National Party of Nigeria (NPN) emerged as the party with the most widespread support and its leader, Alhaji Shehu Shagari, was elected President. On October 1st the military Government handed over power according to its promise, and the new Constitution came into effect.

The new Government adopted no dramatic changes of policy, and the first few months of President Shagari's rule were occupied with gaining a working majority in the House of Representatives and with setting up a balanced Cabinet. Revenue allocation to the Federal and State Governments proved to be very controversial. In 1981 Shagari had to contend with the collapse of the NPN's parliamentary alliance with the Nigerian People's Party and the latter's subsequent "progressive" pact, made for electoral purposes, with the Unity Party of Nigeria and factions of the People's Redemption Party and the Greater Nigeria People's Party.

Nigeria has taken a leading role in African affairs and, as a prominent member of the Organization of African Unity, sent peace-keeping troops to Chad. It condemns military intervention by both Western and Communist powers in the continent, and has been sharply critical of the white regimes in southern Africa.

Government

Under the 1979 Constitution, the federal legislature is a bicameral National Assembly, comprising a Senate of 95 members (five for each State) and a House of Representatives (449 members). Both chambers are elected by universal adult suffrage for four years. Executive power is vested in the President, similarly elected (with a Vice-President) for four years. The President appoints and leads the Federal Executive Council (Cabinet). Each State is partly autonomous and has an elected Governor and unicameral House of Assembly.

Defence

In July 1981 the army totalled 140,000 men, naval strength was 6,000 and the air force had 10,000 men. Military service is voluntary. Defence expenditure in 1980 was ₦987 million.

Economic Affairs

The huge rise in the price of petroleum after 1973 gave an extra impetus to the Nigerian economy. As a member of OPEC and the world's sixth largest producer of oil in 1980, the benefits for Nigeria from the oil boom were enormous. The foreign exchange position was strengthened and the economy expanded at an estimated annual rate of 8 per cent in real terms between 1971 and 1977; foreign aid was greatly reduced and large numbers of jobs created. Daily production of petroleum in 1975-80 averaged about 2.2 million barrels and earnings, U.S. $23,405 million in 1980, increased considerably, due partly to OPEC price increases and reduced production in the Middle East. The Government has a majority shareholding in Shell/BP, AGIP/Phillips, SAFRAP, Mobil and Texaco; in 1979 BP interests were nationalized, in protest at that company's policy with regard to South Africa and as a warning gesture to Britain over its policy in Zimbabwe. There are oil refineries at Elewa Eleme, near Port Harcourt and at Warri, while another, opened at Kaduna in 1980, should eliminate the need for imports of refined oil altogether. Nigeria has large reserves of natural gas, and a gas liquefaction plant was to begin construction on the River Bonny by 1984. The Fourth National Development Plan (1981-85) aims to create a significant petrochemical industry.

Agriculture used to be the mainstay of the economy and in the 1960s provided 66 per cent of the G.D.P. By 1980, because of the vast growth in the volume and value of petroleum output, agriculture's share had dropped to about 20 per cent though it still employs about two-thirds of the working population, almost entirely on smallholdings. Actual production, particularly of cash crops such as groundnuts, declined during this period, affected by the civil war, by drought and disease, and by distribution and payment problems which discouraged farmers. The situation was exacerbated by a demographic drift to urban areas in search of higher wages.

In 1980 President Shagari launched the "Green Revolution", in an effort to reduce food imports and diversify the revenue base away from petroleum, as reserves will probably be seriously depleted by the end of the century. The project aimed at self-sufficiency in food crops by 1985, and to export them by 1987; it was to be supported by the establishment of agro-based industries.

There is extensive exploitation of forests for various timbers. Fishing provides a living for an estimated 1.5 million people, but large-scale trawling accounts for only 1 per cent of catches, so that it has not been possible to develop fish processing as a major industry.

Minerals other than petroleum include tin, columbite (of which Nigeria supplies 95 per cent of the world's industrial requirements), coal, iron ore, lead, zinc and uranium. The U.S.S.R. is helping to build a major iron and steel complex at Ajaokuta, which is due to become fully operational in 1985; a further plant at Aladja opened in 1981, and steel rolling mills at Jos, Oshogbo and Katsina were also to be built. Industry is diversified, and there has been rapid expansion of manufacturing. "Indigenization" has been energetically pursued, alien participation in many small businesses has been barred, and Nigerian majority shareholding in numerous larger firms made compulsory. The brewing, aluminium products, motor vehicles, textiles, cigarettes, footwear, pharmaceuticals, pulp and paper and cement sectors are important. The 1981-85 Development Plan laid emphasis on development of agriculture, agro-based industries and the industrial infrastructure, projecting a drop in petroleum's contribution to G.D.P. from 15.3 per cent in 1980 to 11 per cent by 1985. A total of ₦82,000 million was to be invested and G.D.P. was expected to rise by 8 per cent annually. A vigorous policy of self-sufficiency was to be pursued, and the importance of education and housing for all was stressed.

Despite the fall in world demand for petroleum in 1977-78, the civilian Government inherited a relatively healthy economy. President Shagari indicated that he intended to maintain the policy of restraint on public spending and wages, to restrict imports and to encourage foreign investment while insisting on Nigerian participation. However, because of a surplus of petroleum on the world market, Nigeria was forced to cut its oil prices and production fell to only 700,000 b/d in August 1981. Coupled with a 25 per cent increase in the minimum wage, this caused a budget shortfall of an estimated ₦4,000-5,000 million and considerably depleted foreign exchange reserves. Austerity measures were introduced and the economy consequently recovered in the latter half of 1981. It was feared, however, that some of the larger development projects would have to be delayed or cancelled.

Transport and Communications

There are 3,504 km. of railways and 107,990 km. (1980) of roads. The Nigerian Government has embarked on a major road construction and maintenance programme to which it allocated ₦3,650 million from the 1981-85 Development Plan. The narrow-gauge railway system is being extensively rebuilt and the standard-gauge system extended throughout Nigeria. A rail link is to be built between Port Harcourt and the Ajaokuta steel complex. Work on an overhead monorail was begun in Lagos in 1981. The Niger and other rivers are navigable. The chief ports are Lagos and Port Harcourt. An internal air network links the principal towns, and international services are provided by Nigerian Airways and foreign lines from Lagos and Port Harcourt. Each of the state capitals is eventually to have a modern airport and five are to be of international standard.

The development of telecommunications was given priority in the 1975-80 Development Plan. In 1977 there were 121,032 telephones. There is a satellite earth station at Lanlate and a second is to be built at Kaduna under the Fourth Development Plan.

Social Welfare

The National Provident Fund provides against sickness, retirement and old age. A scheme of retirement pensions and other benefits covers government employees. During 1974 the Federal Government introduced legislation to provide a workers' welfare scheme and a National Emergency Relief Agency. In 1977 Nigeria had 7,552 medical practitioners (80 per cent Nigerians), 277 dental surgeons, 2,450 pharmacists and 34,000 nurses and mid-wives. There were 7,163 health care institutions, with a total of 57,944 beds. The Basic Health Service Scheme, introduced in 1977, aimed to provide primary health care for the whole population. There were plans to incorporate traditional folk medicine into the modern health service. The Federal Government has pledged to build 2,000 housing units per year in each state.

Education

Education is partly the responsibility of the State governments although the Federal Government has played an increasingly important role since 1970. Only 20 per cent of the adult population is literate. In 1979 there were 11,570,000 pupils in primary schools and about 53,000 at the country's 13 universities. The Universal Primary Education scheme, launched in 1976, led to a huge increase in enrolment, although facilities, especially for secondary education were still largely inadequate. Problems include shortages of schools and trained teachers; in 1980 there were 260 teacher-training colleges with a total of 234,680 students. Education is given high priority in budgets and development projects, and in 1981 seven new universities were planned, with a mass literacy campaign and an Open University scheme to be launched in 1982. Technical training is important because of the shortage of skilled workers.

Tourism

Tourism is being developed. The country has fine coastal scenery, thick forests and a stimulating climate on the northern plateau. Nigerian traditional art has exceptional richness and diversity. The All Nigerian Festival of Arts and Culture is held annually in different states.

Public Holidays

1982: July 23rd (Id ul Fitr, end of Ramadan), September 29th (Id ul Kabir), October 1st (National Day), December 25th, 26th (Christmas), December 28th (Mouloud, Birth of the Prophet).

1983: January 1st (New Year's Day), April 1st-4th (Easter).

Weights and Measures

The metric system is in force.

Currency and Exchange Rates

100 kobo = 1 naira (₦).

Exchange rates (December 1981):

£1 sterling = 1.2685 naira;

U.S. $1 = 65.95 kobo.

STATISTICAL SURVEY

* 356,669 sq. miles.

† These estimates are part of a series, beginning in 1963, which assumes a steady growth of population and takes no account of the military activities and economic blockade which followed the attempted secession of the former Eastern Region ("Biafra") in 1967-70. A census taken in November 1963 recorded a total population of 55,670,955 but the UN estimated the mid-1963 population at 46.0 million. Another census was held in November 1973 but the results have been officially repudiated. The registration of voters by the Federal Electoral Commission in January-February 1978 recorded a total of 47,710,680 inhabitants of voting age (over 18 years), suggesting that the total population may be 95 million. The extent of possible over-enumeration of voters is not known.

FINANCE

100 kobo = 1 naira (₦).

Coins: ½, 1, 5, 10 and 25 kobo.

Notes: 50 kobo; 1, 5, 10 and 20 naira.

Exchange rates (December 1981): £1 sterling = 1.2685 naira; U.S. $1 = 65.95 kobo;

100 naira = £78.83 = $151.63.

Note: The naira was introduced on January 1st, 1973, replacing the Nigerian pound (£N) of 20 shillings (240 pence) at the rate of £N1 = 2 naira. Between September 1949 and August 1971 the Nigerian pound was valued at U.S. $2.80. In December 1971 the value was revised to $3.04. The value of the naira was consequently fixed at $1.52 (U.S. $1 = 65.79 kobo). Despite the devaluation of the U.S. dollar in February 1973, this exchange rate remained in effect until April 1974, since when the naira has been allowed to "float". The average value of the naira was $1.5904 in 1974; $1.6248 in 1975; $1.5959 in 1976; $1.5514 in 1977; $1.5745 in 1978; $1.6591 in 1979; $1.8297 in 1980. The Nigerian pound was at par with the pound sterling until November 1967, after which the exchange rate was £N1 = £1.167 sterling until June 1972.

THE CONSTITUTION

The Constitution was promulgated in November 1978 and came into effect on October 1st, 1979. The following is a summary of the General Provisions:

The Federal Republic of Nigeria is a Federation consisting of 19 States and a Federal Capital Territory.

Legislative powers are vested in a National Assembly for the Federation, consisting of a Senate and House of Representatives, and in the House of Assembly of each State. All these bodies are directly elected. The Senate contains five members for each State. The House of Representatives consists of 450 members, and each State House of Assembly contains three times as many members as that State sends to the House of Representatives. The National and State Assemblies each sit for not less than 181 days per year, and their maximum duration is four years. If a law enacted by the House of Assembly of a State is inconsistent with one enacted by the National Assembly, the latter prevails. The exercise of legislative powers by the National Assembly or by the House of Assembly of a State is subject to the jurisdiction of courts of law. The Assemblies may not enact any law with retrospective effect.

The executive power of the Federation is vested in the President (who is directly elected for a period of four years), and may be exercised either directly or through the Vice-President, Ministers of Government, or officers in the public service. The executive power of a State is vested in its Governor (who is directly elected for a period of four years) and may be exercised either directly or through the Deputy Governor, the Commissioners of Government of that State or officers in the public service; such powers are to be exercised so as not to impede the executive powers of the Federation or endanger Federal Government. The appointment of Federal Ministers and State Commissioners is subject to the approval of the Senate or the State House of Assembly respectively, and any members of the Federal or State legislatures so appointed must resign their seats. There must be at least one Federal Minister from each State. The President shall not declare war on another country without the consent of both Houses of the National Assembly. Without prior approval by the Senate, no member of the armed forces is to take part in combat duty outside Nigeria.

The judicial powers of the Federation are vested in the Supreme Court, the Federal Court of Appeal and the Federal High Court. The judicial powers of a State are vested in a High Court and, where required, a Sharia Court of Appeal and a Customary Court of Appeal. Judicial powers may also be vested in such other courts as may be authorized by law.

Local government by democratically elected local councils is guaranteed. The Government of each State is to ensure the existence of such councils under a law providing for their establishment, structure, finance and functions, taking local traditions and conditions into account. Each local government council is to participate in the economic planning and development of the area for which it is responsible. Statutory allocations of public revenue are made to local councils by the National Assembly and by the House of Assembly of the State.

The National Assembly may alter any of the provisions of the Constitution, except for the sections regarding creation of new states, boundary alterations, and fundamental rights, provided that the proposal is supported by a two-thirds majority in the Houses of the National Assembly and by the Houses of Assembly of at least two-thirds of the States.

The Government of the Federation or of a State shall not adopt any religion as a state religion.

The National Assembly may make laws for all or part of the Federation for the maintenance of public security and order and the provision of essential supplies and services.

The National Assembly must approve any treaty between the Federation and another country.

POLITICAL PARTIES

All political parties were banned in May 1966 after the military coup. It was announced in October 1975 that political parties could be formed as from October 1978 in preparation for the return to civilian rule by October 1979. When the ban was lifted in September 1978, more than 30 political associations sprang up, but only five qualified for registration as political parties with the Federal Electoral Commission by satisfying the rule that they should have functioning offices in at least 13 states and that their National Executive Committees should include members from at least 13 states. The five were:

Greater Nigeria People's Party (GNPP): Lagos; broke away from the Nigerian People's Party; Leader Alhaji

WAZIRI IBRAHIM; faction led by MAHMUD WAZIRI broke away after 1979 elections.

Nigerian People's Party (NPP): 4 Ikorodu Rd., Yaba, Lagos; f. 1978; Leader Dr. NNAMDI AZIKIWE; 2,146,183 mems. (1980).

People's Redemption Party (PRP): Lagos; Leader Alhaji AMINU KANO; faction led by Chief MICHAEL IMOUDU broke away after 1979 elections.

Unity Party of Nigeria (UPN): Lagos; Leader Chief OBAFEMI AWOLowo.

OMAN

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Sultanate of Oman lies at the extreme south-east of the Arabian peninsula and is flanked by the United Arab Emirates on the extreme north, by Saudi Arabia on the north and west, and by the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen on the extreme west. All frontiers are ill-defined and none is demarcated. The climate is exceptionally hot and humid in the summer (maximum temperature 42°C (108°F)) and mild in the winter. The official language is Arabic, though English is spoken in business circles. The majority of the population are Ibadhi Muslims; about a quarter are Sunni Muslims. The national flag has horizontal stripes of white, red (one-fifth of the depth) and green, with a vertical red stripe at the hoist. In a canton at the upper left is the state badge, in white. The capital is Muscat, but there is a capital area extending from Muscat through Mutrah to Seeb.

Recent History

Officially known as Muscat and Oman until 1970, the Sultanate has had a special relationship with Britain since the nineteenth century. Full independence was recognized by a treaty of friendship with the United Kingdom on December 20th, 1951, but the armed forces and police still have some British officers. Sultan Said bin Taimur succeeded his father in 1932 and maintained a strictly conservative and isolationist rule until July 1970, when he was overthrown by his son in a bloodless palace coup. The new Sultan, Qaboos bin Said, then began a liberalization of the regime, and increased spending on development.

A major problem in the early 1970s was a conflict with guerrilla forces in Dhofar Province, which after 1974 operated under the name of the People's Front for the Liberation of Oman (PFLO) and were supported by the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen (P.D.R.Y.). In March 1976 a ceasefire between Oman and P.D.R.Y. was arranged by Saudi Arabia and peaceful development of the Dhofar region began. The situation in Dhofar has remained tense, however, particularly since the fall in early 1979 of the Shah of Iran, whose forces had supported Oman. The Iranian revolution and, more recently, the Gulf War in late 1980 have also increased Sultan Qaboos's concern for the safety of the Strait of Hormuz in the north. Other factors which have increased tension in the area have been the growing influence of the U.S.S.R. in the P.D.R.Y. in 1979, and the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan in December 1979. In February 1980 Qaboos agreed in principle to U.S. forces using Masirah Island as a base in an emergency. A defence pact was signed with the U.S.A. in June 1980, and the U.S. is spending over $200 million in 1981-83 on constructing potential military bases.

Oman has supported Egypt in its peacemaking attempts with Israel.

Government

The Sultan rules with the advice of an appointed Cabinet. Oman has a Consultative Assembly of 45 nominated members but no political parties. Legislation is by decree. The country is divided into 40 wilayats (governorates).

Defence

The Omani armed forces numbered 14,500 in July 1981, excluding expatriate personnel on secondment or contract. Defence expenditure was budgeted at 304 million rials in 1980.

Economic Affairs

Cereal crops are grown for local consumption, while dates, limes and pomegranates are the chief export crops. Cattle breeding is extensive in Dhofar, and the Oman camel is highly valued throughout Arabia. Production of oil was begun in August 1967 by Petroleum Development (Oman) Ltd., in which the Oman Government took a 60 per cent share in July 1974. Oman's oil revenues were RO457.7 million in 1978, RO634.6 million in 1979 and RO831.2 million in 1980. Although oil production declined to just under 300,000 b.p.d. in 1979 and 1980, from a peak of 365,000 b.p.d. in 1976, discoveries in Dhofar boosted production to about 330,000 b.p.d. in 1981. Natural gas is being developed from the Yibal field and the aim of the RO7,365 million Second Five-Year Plan, which began in 1981, is to concentrate on alternatives to oil as a source of wealth and to assist the private sector. The drop in oil prices in late 1981 has meant that the Five-Year Plan may need to be trimmed.

Transport and Communications

Many new roads have been constructed since 1970. A 362-km. highway links Oman with Dubai, and there is a coastal highway between Muscat and Mutrah. Mina Qaboos is the principal port and the main oil terminal is at Mina-al-Fahal. The Government has a share in Gulf Air, and there are international airports at Seeb and Salalah.

Social Welfare

Oman has a free National Health Service, and in 1980 there were 14 hospitals, 300 doctors and 851 nurses. There were also more than 60 clinics.

Education

Since 1970 great advances have been made in education and by 1981 107,000 children were receiving education in 373 schools.

Public Holidays

1982: May 21st* (Leilat al Meiraj, Ascension of the Prophet), July 23rd* (Id ul Fitr, end of Ramadan), September 29th* (Id ul Adha, Feast of the Sacrifice), October 19th* (Muslim New Year), November 18th (National Day), November 19th (Birthday of the Sultan), December 28th (Mouloud, Birth of the Prophet).

* Dependent on the Muslim lunar calendar; these dates may vary by one or two days from the dates given.

Weights and Measures

The imperial, metric and local systems are all used although the metric system was officially adopted in 1974.

Currency and Exchange Rates

1,000 baiza = 1 rial Omani (RO).

Exchange rates (December 1981):

£1 sterling = 664.4 baiza;

U.S. $1 = 345.4 baiza.

STATISTICAL SURVEY

Area: 300,000 sq. km. (120,000 sq. miles).

Population: for planning purposes the population is assumed to be 1,500,000 (1981); Capital area (Muscat to Seeb) estimated 50,000. Estimated number of gainfully employed 150,000; agriculture 109,000; fisheries 15,000; government 10,000; construction 6,000; oil, banking, services 5,000; others 5,000 (1972).

Agriculture: Total area under cultivation 1978/79

(hectares): 41,156 (Batinah and Capital Area 20,842, Oman interior 5,169, Sharqiya and Ja'alan 4,285). Crops include dates, lucerne, limes, onions, wheat, bananas, mangoes, tobacco, sorghum, sweet potatoes, chickpeas and coconuts.

Livestock (1978/79 Agriculture Census result, '000 head): goats 1,165, cattle 319.5, sheep 138.3, camels 229.3 donkeys 43.0.

FINANCE

1,000 baiza = 1 rial Omani (RO).

Coins: 2, 5, 10, 25, 50 and 100 baiza.

Notes: 100, 250 and 500 baiza; 1, 5, 10 and 20 rials.

Exchange rates (December 1981): £1 sterling = 664.4 baiza; U.S. $1 = 345.4 baiza.

100 rials Omani = £150.52 = $289.52.

Note: The rial Saidi (renamed the rial Omani in 1972) was introduced in May 1970, replacing the Persian Gulf Indian rupee at the rate of 1 rial = 21 rupees = £1 sterling. The initial value of the rial was U.S. $2.40 ($1 = 416.7 baiza), which remained in operation until August 1971. From December 1971 to February 1973 the rial's value was $2.6057 ($1 = 383.8 baiza). The present dollar valuation has been effective since February 1973. The rial was at par with the pound sterling until the latter was allowed to "float" in June 1972.

TRANSPORT

ROADS

A network of adequate graded roads links all the main centres of population and only a few mountain villages are not accessible by Land Rover. A rapid road construction programme began in 1970 and by 1977 there were 1,447 km. of asphalt road and 10,500 km. of graded roads. The final link in the 362 km. Dubai-Oman highway was finished in November 1977. A new coastal highway between Muscat and Mutrah was opened in November 1978. In Dhofar tarmac roads have been completed from Raysut through Salalah to Taqa. Roads between Seeb and Nizwa and Salalah and Thumrait have been completed. 1,590 km. of asphalt road are to be built during the 1981-85 plan.

SHIPPING

Port Services Corporation Ltd.: Mina Qaboos, P.O.B. 133, Muscat; Chair. Sayed SALIM BIN NASSER AL-BUSAIDI; Gen. Man. AWAD SALIM SHANFARI.

The new port at Mina Qaboos, which was completed in 1974 at a cost of RO 18.2 million, provides 13 berths. Nine of these can take vessels with draughts of up to 36 feet. The port also provides warehousing facilities and a harbour for dhows and coastal vessels. By 1979 about 1,000 ships were calling at the port, which was handling about one million tons of cargo (about half its capacity). Mina Qaboos is to be extended under the 1981-85 development plan.

The oil terminal at Mina-al-Fahal can also accommodate the largest super-tankers on off-shore loading buoys. Similar facilities for the import of refined petroleum products exist at Mina-al-Fahal and Riyam (near Muscat). In 1977 the Government created the Port Services Corporation to operate Mina Qaboos. The Corporation is 60 per cent Government financed, with the remainder being supplied by the private sector.

Mina Raysut, near Salalah, has 4 berths. Loading facilities for smaller craft exist at Sohar, Khaboura, Sur, Marbet and Salalah.

CIVIL AVIATION

Domestic and international flights operate from Seeb International Airport, whose extended runway was opened in December 1979. Oman's second international airport at Salalah was completed in 1978. Most towns of any size have small air strips.

Gulf Aviation Ltd (Gulf Air): P.O.B. 138, Bahrain; f. 1950; jointly owned by the Governments of Bahrain, Qatar, the United Arab Emirates and Oman; services linking Bahrain, Doha, Abu Dhabi, Dubai, Sharjah, Salalah and Muscat with London, Amsterdam, Paris, Larnaca, Beirut, Cairo, Kuwait, Dhahran, Ras-al-Khaimah, Shiraz, Karachi, Bombay, Baghdad, Amman, Bangkok, Hong Kong and Manila; fleet consists of nine Boeing 737-200, eight L-1011 TriStars.

Other airlines using Seeb for passenger flights include Alia (Jordan), Air India, Air Tanzania, British Airways, EgyptAir, Kuwait Airlines, MEA (Lebanon), PIA (Pakistan), Saudia, Somali Airlines and UTA (France). Cargo flights are operated by TMA (Lebanon) and Tradewinds Airways (United Kingdom).

PAKISTAN

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Islamic Republic of Pakistan is bordered by India to the east and Afghanistan and Iran to the west. It has a short frontier with China in the far north-east. The climate is hot and dry with an average temperature of 27°C (80°F) except in the mountains where the winters are cold. The national language is Urdu. Punjabi, Sindhi and Pushtu are also widely spoken and English is extensively used. The state religion is Islam, embracing about 97 per cent of the population, the remainder being mainly Hindu or Christian. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) is dark green, charged with a white crescent moon and a five-pointed white star, with a vertical white stripe at the hoist. The capital is Islamabad.

Recent History

Pakistan was created in August 1947 by the partition of the former British India into the independent states of India and Pakistan. It originally had two parts, East Pakistan and West Pakistan, separated by about 1,000 miles of Indian territory. The new nation was formed in response to demands by the Muslim League (led by Muhammad Ali Jinnah) for a specifically Islamic state, to free Muslims from domination by the Hindu majority in the sub-continent. Partition led immediately to religious and frontier conflicts in which hundreds of thousands of lives were lost. Jinnah, also known as Quaid-i-Azam ("Great Leader"), became the first Governor-General of Pakistan but died in 1948. Since 1949 a cease-fire line has separated Pakistani and Indian forces in the disputed territory of Jammu and Kashmir.

From the time of partition the eastern and western sections of Pakistan were united only by religion, with no geographical, economic or racial coherence. The majority of the population lived in the smaller wing, East Pakistan, but political and military power was concentrated in the West. In 1956 a republic was established but in 1958 parliamentary government ceased and was replaced by martial law. General (later Field-Marshal) Muhammad Ayub Khan was appointed Martial Law Administrator and in 1960 was elected President by the "basic democracy" system he had established. Widespread disorders led to Ayub Khan's resignation in 1969. General Agha Muhammad Yahya Khan replaced him and martial law was reimposed.

In December 1970 elections were held for an assembly which was to draw up a new constitution. For the first time the East Pakistanis were to be allowed a majority in the assembly. Sheikh Mujibur Rahman's Awami League, standing for autonomy, won with an overwhelming majority in East Pakistan while the Pakistan People's Party (PPP) won most seats in the West. Yahya Khan tried to persuade Sheikh Mujib to form a coalition government with the PPP, but negotiations broke down and in March 1971 the army was sent in to settle the matter by force. East Pakistan declared its independence as the People's Republic of Bangladesh and civil war broke out. Indian support for Bangladesh grew and in December 1971 the Indian army intervened, forcing the Pakistani army to surrender. Yahya Khan resigned and Zulfikar Ali Bhutto, head of the PPP, became President of the truncated Pakistan. After Bangladesh received widespread international recognition, Pakistan left the Commonwealth in January 1972. Pakistan recognized Bangladesh in February 1974.

In 1972 President Bhutto proposed a constitution but in 1973 opposition parties of the right and left formed a United Democratic Front to demand amendments. An amended constitution came into force in August 1973 and Bhutto became Prime Minister. Fazal Elahi Chaudhry, Speaker of the National Assembly, became constitutional President.

In February 1973 presidential rule was promulgated in Baluchistan following an outbreak of tribal fighting. In April 1974 the Government announced the ending of army operations in Baluchistan and an amnesty for political opponents, but fighting continued. In December 1975 Governor's rule was imposed on Baluchistan, but was lifted a year later and a new PPP Cabinet sworn in. At the beginning of 1975 violence increased in the North-West Frontier Province, a result of the activities of the "Pakhtoonistan" separatist movement.

Following accusations by the opposition Pakistan National Alliance (PNA) of vote-rigging in the elections for the National and Provincial Assemblies in March 1977, there was a breakdown in law and order, and martial law was imposed in Karachi, Lahore and Hyderabad. In July 1977 the Army deposed Bhutto. A martial law regime was established, with Gen. Mohammad Zia ul-Haq, the Army Chief of Staff, as Chief Martial Law Administrator. President Chaudhry remained in office as Head of State and a four-member Military Council was formed. In September the seven-year-old state of emergency was ended in preparation for elections. Bhutto was imprisoned for allegedly ordering the murder of the father of a former political opponent and additional charges were later brought against him. In March 1978 the Lahore High Court sentenced Bhutto to death for conspiracy to murder, and an appeal was lodged with the Supreme Court.

In January 1978 Gen. Zia appointed a 16-member Council of Advisers which was to be subordinate to the Military Council. In July the Council of Advisers was replaced by a Cabinet of 22 military and civilian members but, following the PNA's decision to participate in government, a new civilian Cabinet was sworn in in August 1978. At the same time Gen. Zia pledged to hold elections by October 1979. President Chaudhry resigned in September 1978 and his office was assumed by Gen. Zia.

During late 1978 the PPP repeatedly demanded an early election in the hope of winning a large majority and releasing Bhutto. However, in February 1979 the Supreme Court upheld the death sentence against Bhutto, and he was hanged in April. After the resignations of the PNA members of the Cabinet later in the month, a new Cabinet was formed, composed mainly of military personnel and bureaucrats.

Local elections, held on a non-party basis, took place in September; following the refusal by the two largest parties, the PPP and the PNA, to participate in the general election scheduled for the autumn because of the conditions imposed, Gen. Zia announced in October the indefinite postponement of the polls.

In 1980 there was widespread dissatisfaction amongst politicians and lawyers at the severe restrictions imposed on the judiciary and on personal freedom through Gen. Zia's martial law orders of May 1980. Political activity, although officially hanned since October 1979, continued. In March 1981 nine political parties, including the PPP, formed an alliance, the Movement for the Restoration of Democracy, calling for a return to parliamentary government. However, the hijacking of a PIA airliner in the same month by PPP activists caused the movement to lose popularity and seven of its members left. Several hundred opposition politicians were arrested or placed under house arrest.

Also in March a new 23-member Federal Council was formed, with a greatly enlarged civilian element, and provincial cabinets were established in the North-West Frontier Province, Punjab and Sind. The Government also promulgated an interim Constitution which was to remain in force as long as Pakistan remained under martial law. In January 1982 a new advisory committee, the Majlis-i-Shura, was formally inaugurated to advise on religious questions until Pakistan had a new political system based on Islamic teachings.

Pakistan became a member of the non-aligned movement in 1979. General Zia has pursued a policy of maintaining close links with other Islamic states in the Middle East and Africa, which have provided considerable economic support, as has the People's Republic of China. Pakistan's controversial nuclear programme prompted the U.S.A. to cut off development aid in April 1979 but, as a result of the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan, the U.S.A. agreed in 1981 to provide Pakistan with a $3,200 million military and economic aid package. This agreement, in particular the sale of F-16 aircraft to Pakistan, caused relations with India to deteriorate as the Indian Government felt that it would upset the balance of power in the sub-continent and precipitate an arms race. Consequently, initial discussions were held in early 1982 on the possibility of a non-aggression treaty, proposed by Pakistan. In October 1981 Pakistan's attempt to rejoin the Commonwealth was blocked by India. Relations with Afghanistan were strained, as rebel Afghan tribesmen used areas inside Pakistan as bases for their activities and the number of Afghan refugees in Pakistan had exceeded 2.5 million by September 1981. During 1980 and 1981 attempts were made to begin talks between the Governments of Afghanistan, Pakistan and Iran, but these continued to be frustrated by disagreements on all sides.

Government

In July 1977 a martial law administration was set up and the 1973 constitution (which provided for a bicameral Federal Legislature, including a 216-member elected National Assembly, and a Prime Minister as the chief executive, elected by the Assembly) was put into abeyance until elections are held and a new government is formed. In March 1981 a Provisional Constitutional Order was promulgated, which retained, wholly or in part, 119 articles of the 1973 Constitution (see Constitution).

Pakistan comprises four provinces (each with an appointed Governor and provincial government), the federal capital of Islamabad and federally administered "trihal areas".

Defence

In July 1981 the armed forces totalled 450,000 men including 420,000 in the army, 13,000 in the navy and 17,600 in the air force. The defence budget for 1981/82 was 17,712 million rupees. Military service is voluntary.

Economic Affairs

Agriculture is the mainstay of the economy, employing more than half the labour force and providing over 30 per cent of G.D.P. Wheat, rice, sugar cane and cotton are the main crops. Agricultural production increased by 4.4 per cent during 1980/81 after a marked improvement of 6.9 per cent in 1979/80. Wheat production increased by 5 per cent to 11,340,000 metric tons. The sugar cane crop set a new record with an increase of 16.9 per cent in 1980/81, compared with only 0.6 per cent in 1979/80. Production of milled rice, however, declined 4.7 per cent to 3,070,000 metric tons, compared with a decline of 1.5 per cent in 1979/80. Cotton output remained almost unchanged at around 4 million bales (each of 392 lb. or 178 kg.). In order to increase agricultural output, the Government has implemented policies aimed at reclaiming waterlogged land and reorienting agricultural credit in favour of small farmers.

Pakistan has a wide range of minerals, but mining is not greatly developed. The Government aims to exploit deposits of graphite and limestone, discovered in 1977, for export. In 1979 deposits of copper were discovered in Baluchistan and there are coal deposits of some 477 million tons, mostly around Lakhra. Oilfields are being worked at Dhulian, Balkassar, Tut Doudal and Meyal, and there are gas deposits in Baluchistan. The large earth-filled Tarbela Dam, as well as providing irrigation, has a generating capacity of 700 MW, which should double by 1985.

Nationalization of major industries began in 1972, but the Martial Law Government reversed this policy and has introduced a number of measures to restore levels of private sector investment. Pakistan's first steel plant, built with Soviet aid at Bin Qasim near Karachi, was inaugurated in 1981.

In 1980/81 exports totalled $2,960 million, an increase of 25.1 per cent over 1979/80. A large part of this increase was due to good performances in the rice and cotton crops: exports of raw cotton and rice accounted for 36.9 per cent of total exports. Despite the favourable export performance, imports increased by 14.1 per cent to reach $5,410 million, partly due to liberalization of some imports, particularly raw materials and capital goods, and higher international prices. This resulted in a trade deficit of $2,450 million, a large part of which is met by remittances from Pakistanis working abroad ($2,100 million in 1980/81), but crude oil and petroleum products alone accounted for $1,530 million of the total import bill in 1980/81.

Foreign aid is needed to offset the trade deficit and, since the Soviet occupation of Afghanistan, aid has been received from the World Bank Consortium, the IMF, the U.S.A., Japan and other donors. Total foreign aid to Pakistan is around $5,000 million per year, and external sources were expected to provide 47.9 per cent of planned development expenditure in 1981/82.

During 1980/81 G.D.P. grew in real terms by 5.7 per cent, compared with 7 per cent in 1979/80. In 1979 movement towards an "Islamic economy" was announced. In June 1980 zakat (poor-tax at the rate of 2½ per cent annually on banks' deposits and savings accounts) was deducted from all savings accounts, while ushr (tax on agricultural produce at the rate of 5 per cent) was also due to be implemented. In January 1981 Pakistan introduced interest-free banking. The current Five-Year Plan (1978-83) lays emphasis on greater production of basic foodstuffs, including improvements in the rural infrastructure, improved manpower to enable Pakistanis to work abroad and a larger role in industry for the private sector.

Transport and Communications

The "Friendship Highway" through the Himalayas, linking northern Pakistan with Xinjiang in China, was completed in mid-1978. Modernization of Pakistan's railway system was due to be completed by 1982. The principal port is Karachi. A second port 32 km. (20 miles) away, Port Mohammad bin Qasim, started partial operation in 1980. International air transport is provided by Pakistan International Airways Corporation (PIA) and numerous foreign airlines.

Social Welfare

Social welfare services are run mainly through the Development Schemes and Urban Community Projects. Government support is given to voluntary bodies providing social relief. The National Council of Social Welfare provides care for children, women, delinquents and the handicapped. An Old-Age Benefits Scheme was inaugurated in 1976, managed by the State Life Insurance Corporation. In 1976 the Government doubled the birth control budget and planned sterilization of 7 per cent of couples by the 1980s. In 1977 there were over 3,500 hospitals, with 39,512 beds, and 19,922 registered physicians (not all resident or working in Pakistan).

Education

Universal free primary education is a constitutional right but less than half Pakistan's children in fact receive it. In 1979/80 there were 7,090,000 enrolled at primary schools and 1,996,000 at secondary schools. The Government's target is to achieve universal primary education for boys by 1983 and for girls by 1987. All institutions except missions are nationalized. From 1976 agrotechnical subjects were introduced into the school curriculum and 25 trade schools were established in 1976. There are 15 universities. Adult literacy averaged about 23 per cent in 1979.

Tourism

The Himalayan hill stations of Pakistan provide magnificent scenery, a fine climate and excellent opportunities for field sports, mountaineering and winter sports.

Public Holidays

1982: May 1st (Labour Day), July 23rd-25th* (Id ul Fitr, end of Ramadan), August 14th (Independence Day), September 6th (Defence of Pakistan Day), September 11th (Anniversary of Death of Quaid-i-Azam), September 29th-October 1st* (Id ul Azha, Feast of the Sacrifice), October 27th, 28th* (Ashura), November 9th* (Allama Iqbal Day), December 25th (Birthday of Quaid-i-Azam and Christmas), December 26th (Boxing Day)†, December 28th* (Eid-i-Milad-un-Nabi, Birth of the Prophet).

1983: March 23rd (Pakistan Day, proclamation of republic in 1956), April 1st (Good Friday)†, April 4th (Easter Monday)†.

* Dates of Muslim religious holidays are subject to the sighting of the moon.

† Optional holidays for Christians only.

Weights and Measures

The metric system has been introduced, but imperial and local weights are still in use:

1 maund = 82.28 lb. (37.32 kg.).
1 seer = 2.057 lb. (933 grammes).
1 tola = 180 grains (11.66 grammes).

Currency and Exchange Rates

100 paisa = 1 Pakistani rupee.

Exchange rates (December 1981):

£1 sterling = 19.04 rupees;
U.S. $1 = 9.90 rupees.

100 paisa = 1 Pakistani rupee.

Coins: 1, 2, 5, 10, 25 and 50 paisa; 1 rupee.

Notes: 5, 10, 50 and 100 rupees.

Exchange rates (December 1981): £1 sterling = 19.04 rupees; U.S. $1 = 9.90 rupees.
100 Pakistani rupees = £5.25 = $10.10.

Note: From July 1955 to May 1972 the par value of the Pakistani rupee was 21 U.S. cents (U.S. $1 = 4.7619 rupees). Between May 1972 and February 1973 the central exchange rate was U.S. $1 = 11.00 rupees and the market rate $1 = 11.031 rupees. In February 1973 a new central rate of $1 = 9.90 rupees was established. In January 1982 the link with the U.S. dollar was ended and the rupee was pegged to a trade-weighted "basket" of currencies. In terms of sterling, the central exchange rate was £1 = 11.43 rupees from November 1967 to August 1971, and £1 = 12.41 rupees from December 1971 to May 1972.

THE CONSTITUTION

The Constitution was promulgated on April 10th, 1973, and amended in 1974, 1975, 1976, 1977, 1978, 1979, 1980 and 1981.

GENERAL PROVISIONS

The Preamble upholds the principles of democracy, freedom, equality, tolerance and social justice as enunciated by Islam. The rights of religious and other minorities are guaranteed.

The Islamic Republic of Pakistan consists of four provinces—Baluchistan, North-West Frontier Province, Punjab and Sind—and the tribal areas under federal administration. The provinces are autonomous units.

Fundamental rights are guaranteed and include equality of status (women have equal rights with men), freedom of thought, speech, worship and the press and freedom of assembly and association. No law providing for preventive detention shall be made except to deal with persons acting against the integrity, security or defence of Pakistan. No such law shall authorize the detention of a person for more than one month.

PRESIDENT

The President is Head of State and acts on the advice of the Prime Minister. He is elected at a joint sitting of the Federal Legislature to serve for a term of five years. He must be a Muslim. The President may be impeached for violating the Constitution or gross misconduct.

FEDERAL LEGISLATURE

The Federal Legislature consists of the President, a lower and an upper house. The lower house, called the National Assembly, has 200 members elected directly for a term of five years, on the basis of universal adult suffrage, while the upper house, called the Senate, has 63 members who serve for four years, half retiring every two years.*

* Although the Constitution provides for a Senate of 63 members, the number in 1977, when the Senate was dissolved, was still 45, the same as before the promulgation of the Constitution in 1973.

Each Provincial Assembly is to elect 14 Senators. The tribal areas are to return five and the remaining two are to be elected from the Federal Capital Territory by members of the Provincial Assemblies. Six seats in the National Assembly are reserved for minorities and for a period of 10 years from 1973 women are to get 10 seats, raising the strength of the Assembly to 216.

There shall be two sessions of the National Assembly and Senate each year, with not more than 120 days between the last sitting of a session and the first sitting of the next session.

The role of the Senate in an overwhelming majority of the subjects shall be merely advisory. Disagreeing with any legislation of the National Assembly, it shall have the right to send it back only once for reconsideration. In case of disagreement in other subjects, the Senate and National Assembly shall sit in a joint session to decide the matter by a simple majority.

GOVERNMENT

The Constitution provides that bills may originate in either house, except money bills. The latter must originate in the National Assembly and cannot go to the Senate. A bill must be passed by both houses and then approved by the President, who may return the bill and suggest amendments. In this case, after the bill has been reconsidered and passed, with or without amendment, the President must give his assent to it.

PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT

In the matter of relations between Federation and Provinces, the Federal Legislature shall have the power to make laws, including laws bearing on extra-territorial affairs, for the whole or any part of Pakistan, while a Provincial Assembly shall be empowered to make laws for that Province or any part of it. Matters in the Federal Legislative List shall be subject to the exclusive authority of the Federal Legislature, while the Federal Legislature and a Provincial Assembly shall have power to legislate with regard to matters referred to in the Concurrent Legislative List. Any matter not referred to in either list may be subject to laws made by a Provincial Assembly alone, and not by the Federal Legislature, although the latter shall have exclusive power to legislate with regard to matters not referred to in either list for those areas in the Federation not included in any Province.

Four provisions seek to ensure the stability of the parliamentary system. First, the Prime Minister shall be elected by the National Assembly and he and the other Ministers shall be responsible to it. Secondly, any resolution calling for the removal of a Prime Minister shall have to name his successor in the same resolution which shall be adopted by not less than two-thirds of the total number of members of the lower house. The requirement of two-thirds majority is to remain in force for 15 years or three electoral terms, whichever is more. Thirdly, the Prime Minister shall have the right to seek dissolution of the legislature at any time even during the pendency of a no-confidence motion. Fourthly, if a no-confidence motion is defeated, such a motion shall not come up before the house for the next six months.

All these provisions for stability shall apply mutatis mutandis to the Provincial Assemblies also.

A National Economic Council, to include the Prime Minister and a representative from each province, shall advise the Provincial and Federal Governments.

There shall be a Governor for each Province, appointed by the President, and a Council of Ministers to aid and advise him, with a Chief Minister appointed by the Governor. Each Province has a provincial legislature consisting of the Governor and Provincial Assembly.

The executive authorities of every Province shall be required to ensure that their actions are in compliance with the Federal laws which apply in that Province. The Federation shall be required to consider the interests of each Province in the exercise of its authority in that Province. The Federation shall further be required to afford every Province protection from external aggression and internal disturbance, and to ensure that every Province is governed in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution.

To further safeguard the rights of the smaller provinces, a Council of Common Interests has been created. Comprising the Chief Ministers of the four provinces and four Central Ministers to decide upon specified matters of common interest, the Council is responsible to the Federal Legislature. The constitutional formula gives the net proceeds of excise duty and royalty on gas to the province concerned. The profits on hydro-electric power generated in each province shall go to that province.

OTHER PROVISIONS

Other provisions include the procedure for elections, the setting up of an Advisory Council of Islamic Ideology and an Islamic Research Institute, and the administration of tribal areas.

AMENDMENTS

Amendments to the Constitution shall require a two-thirds majority in the National Assembly and endorsement by a simple majority in the Senate.

In 1975 the Constitution (3rd Amendment) Bill abolished the provision that a State of Emergency may not be extended beyond six months without the approval of Parliament and empowered the Government to detain a person for three months instead of one month.

In July 1977, following the imposition of martial law, several provisions, including all fundamental rights provided for in the Constitution, were suspended.

An amendment of September 1978 provided for separate electoral registers to be drawn up for Muslims and non-Muslims.

In October 1979 a martial law order inserted a clause in the Constitution establishing the supremacy of military courts in trying all offences, criminal and otherwise.

On May 26th, 1980, the President issued a Constitution Amendment Order, which amended Article 199, debarring High Courts from making any order relating to the validity of effect of any judgment or sentence passed by a military court or tribunal granting an injunction; from making an order or entering any proceedings in respect of matters under the jurisdiction or cognizance of a military court or tribunal, and from initiating proceedings against the Chief Martial Law Administrator or a Martial Law Administrator.

By another amendment of the Constitution, the Federal Shariat Court will replace the Shariat Benches of the High Courts. The Shariat Court, on the petition of a citizen or the Government, may decide whether any law or provision of law is contrary to the injunction of Islam as laid down in the Holy Koran and the Sunnah of the Holy Prophet.

In March 1981 the Government promulgated Provisional Constitutional Order 1981, whereby provision is made for the appointment of one or more Vice-Presidents, to be appointed by the Chief Martial Law Administrator, and a Federal Council (Majlis-i-Shura) consisting of persons nominated by the President. All political parties not registered with the Election Commission on September 13th, 1979, will be dissolved and their properties made forfeit to the Federal Council. Any party working against the ideology, sovereignty or security of Pakistan may be dissolved by the President.

The proclamation of July 1977, imposing martial law, and subsequent orders amending the Constitution and further martial law regulations shall not be questioned by any court on any grounds.

All Chief Justices and Judges shall take a new oath of office. New High Court benches for the interior of the provinces shall be set up and retired judges are debarred from holding office in Pakistan for two years. The powers of the High Courts shall be limited for suspending the operation of an order for the detention of any person under any law provided for preventative detention, or release any person on bail, arrested under the same law.

FEDERAL LEGISLATURE

Under the 1973 Constitution, the Federal Legislature comprises a lower house (the National Assembly) and an upper house (the Senate).

NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

The National Assembly is elected for five years. It comprises 200 directly elected members and 10 women members elected by the Assembly. Six seats are reserved for minorities. The National Assembly which came into existence after the March 1977 elections was dissolved in July 1977, following the imposition of martial law.

SENATE

The Senate serves for four years. In 1973, when the new Constitution came into effect, the Senate comprised 45 members. The Constitution provides for an increase to 63 members, including 56 elected by the provincial assemblies. The Senate was dissolved in July 1977, following the imposition of martial law.

RELIGION

ISLAM

Islam is the state religion. The majority of the population are Sunni Muslims, while about one-tenth of the total population are of the Shi'a sect.

HINDUISM

Hindus make up 1.6 per cent of the population.

CHRISTIANITY

There is a small minority of Christians, including about 423,762 Catholics in 1978.

THE PRESS

In 1980 there were 115 daily newspapers and 327 weeklies and bi-weeklies. The first Urdu-language newspaper, the daily Urdu Akhbar, was founded in 1836. After 1947, with the establishment of Pakistan and the introduction of modern equipment, the more influential English newspapers, such as Dawn and The Pakistan Times, were firmly established, while several new Urdu newspapers, for example Nawa-i-Waqt and Daily Jang, became very popular. The Urdu Press comprises 797 newspapers, with Daily Jang, Musawat, Imroze, Nawa-i-Waqt, Jasarat and Mashriq being the most influential. The largest daily is Daily Jang (circulation c. 290,000). Although the English-language Press reaches only 2 per cent of the population and totals 128 publications, it is influential in political, academic and professional circles.

The Press has always been subject to Government scrutiny and "guided reporting", especially in political matters. After the July 1977 coup the martial law administration closed down two daily papers. In October 1979 press censorship was imposed and publication of Musawat, Sadaqat and other opposition papers was suspended. In December 1981 censorship was lifted from literary and educational books and magazines, and in January 1982 pre-censorship on daily newspapers was also lifted. Pre-censorship continued, however, on political, semi-political and non-literary weeklies, monthlies and periodicals.

There also exist several institutes for nuclear research in the fields of agriculture, food stuffs and medicine.

RELATED TERRITORIES

The status of Jammu and Kashmir has remained unresolved since the 1949 cease-fire, whereby the area was divided into sectors administered by India and Pakistan separately. Pakistan administers Azad (Free) Kashmir and the Northern Areas as de facto dependencies, being responsible for foreign affairs, defence, coinage, currency and the implementation of UN resolutions concerning Kashmir.

AZAD KASHMIR

Area: 11,639 sq. km. (4,494 sq. miles).

Estimated population: 1,700,000 (1977).

Administration: Government is based on the Azad Jammu and Kashmir Interim Constitution Act of 1974. There are four administrative districts: Kotli, Mirpur, Muzaffarabad and Punch.

Legislative Assembly: consists of 42 members: 40 directly elected and two women nominated by the other members.

Azad Jammu and Kashmir Council: consists of the President of Pakistan as Chairman, the President of Azad Kashmir as Vice-Chairman, five members nominated by the President of Pakistan, six members by the Legislative Assembly, and the Pakistan Minister of Kashmir affairs and Northern affairs (ex officio). President and Chief Executive: Brig. MUHAMMAD HAYAT KHAN.

NORTHERN AREAS

Area: 72,520 sq. km. (28,000 sq. miles).

Estimated population: 500,000 (1977).

Administration: There are three administrative districts: Baltistan, Diamir and Gilgit. The Northern Areas Council consists of 16 elected members, headed by a Resident Commissioner who is appointed by the Pakistan Government.

PANAMA

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of Panama is a narrow country situated at the southern end of the isthmus separating North and South America. It is bounded to the west by Costa Rica and to the east by Colombia in South America. The Caribbean Sea is to the north and the Pacific Ocean to the south. The climate is tropical maritime, with temperatures of 23°–27°C (73°–81°F) in coastal areas. The rainy season is from April until December. Spanish is the official language and Roman Catholicism the religion of most of the people. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) has four quarters: on the top row the left-hand quarter is white with a five-pointed blue star in the centre, while the right-hand quarter is red; on the bottom row the left quarter is blue and the right quarter is white with a five-pointed red star in the centre. The capital is Panama City.

Recent History

In 1821 Panama declared itself independent from Spain and joined in a union with Colombia. In 1903 it declared its separate independence with the support of the U.S.A. In that year the U.S.A. bought the rights to build the Panama Canal, which was opened in 1914. The early years of independence were characterized by frequent changes of government. President José Antonio Remón was assassinated in 1955 and was succeeded as President by Ernesto de la Guardia, elected in 1956. His successor was Roberto Chiari (1960–64), followed by Marco Aurelio Robles (1964–68). In October 1968, after only eleven days in office, the next elected President, Dr. Arnulfo Arias Madrid, was deposed by the National Guard, led by Col. (later Brig.-Gen.) Omar Torrijos Herrera. The National Assembly was dissolved and political activity suspended. Political parties were banned in February 1969. Elections were held in August 1972 for a National Assembly of Community Representatives. In October the Assembly conferred extraordinary powers on Gen. Torrijos as Chief of Government for six years. Considerable agrarian reform was undertaken during Gen. Torrijos's administration.

The terms of the treaty by which the Panama Canal Zone was ceded to the U.S.A. in 1903 have bedevilled relations between the two countries ever since. In 1974 agreement was reached on principles for a new treaty by which the U.S.A. would surrender its jurisdiction over the Canal Zone, but negotiations continued for a further three years. In September 1976 the worst student riots for eight years took place, resulting from disagreement with the Government's handling of the Canal Zone negotiations and increases in rice and milk prices while wages were frozen and unemployment high.

Intensified negotiation in 1977 resulted in the signing by the two Governments in September 1977 of two new Canal treaties. In a subsequent referendum 66 per cent of voters approved the new treaties. In March and April 1978 the U.S. Senate ratified the two treaties and on October 1st, 1979, they finally came into effect. Panama assumed control of the former Canal Zone, which was abolished. The Canal was placed under a joint body, the Panama Canal Commission, on which the U.S.A. will retain majority representation until 1989. U.S. military forces will remain in Panama until the year 2000, and the U.S.A. will be entitled to defend the Canal's neutrality thereafter.

In August 1978 elections for a new National Assembly took place. On October 11th the new representatives elected Dr. Aristides Royo, a former Minister of Education, to be President for a six-year term. On the same day Gen. Torrijos resigned as Chief of Government but retained the post of Commander of the National Guard. After the elections, political parties were again allowed and direct presidential and legislative elections are scheduled for 1984.

In 1980 popular discontent with the Government, due to economic difficulties and American qualifications of the Canal treaties, was reflected in the results of the elections, held in September, to the new National Legislative Council. Although the government party won 10 of the 19 seats, the high rate of abstention afforded it support by only 40 per cent of the total electorate. President Royo subsequently made it known that he needed more authority to govern, and in January 1981 carried out a major Cabinet reshuffle. In July Gen. Torrijos was killed in an air crash and it was feared that his death would lead to political instability. However, despite an opposition move calling for the holding of elections at an earlier date, the National Guard pledged its support for the Government and the anticipated power struggle did not ensue.

Government

The National Assembly of Community Representatives has 505 members elected by popular vote for a six-year term. The Assembly elects the President, who is Head of State, and the Vice-President. In 1980 the 56-member National Legislative Council was created to act as an upper chamber; 19 members were elected and 37 appointed from the National Assembly. Panama is divided into nine provinces and three autonomous Indian Reservations. Each province has a governor appointed by the President.

Defence

There is a National Guard of some 11,000 men, but a military force is assembled only in emergencies.

Economic Affairs

Receipts from the Panama Canal and international capital inflows help to offset Panama's traditional trade deficit which reached $689 million in 1979 and $713 million in 1980. In 1980 services accounted for over 60 per cent of the G.D.P. Panama has developed its potential as an international finance centre based on the balboa's full transferability, the country's favourable tax law provisions and the absence of state controls. By May 1981 107 banks were domiciled in Panama and the banking and insurance sector grew by 11.1 per cent in that year. The Colón Free Zone has become the world's largest trading location after Hong Kong and there are plans to extend the present area of 37 hectares to 98 hectares.

Agriculture contributed 14 per cent of the G.D.P. and employed 35 per cent of the workforce in 1980.

The principal cash crops are bananas and sugar while the major food crops are rice, maize and beans. Agricultural output is traditionally poor because of the shortage of arable land, but the sector grew by 1 per cent in 1980, compared with a decline of 1.8 per cent in 1979. Fishing, especially for shrimps, is growing in importance and Panama claims to be the world's third largest exporter of shrimps. Prospects for fish production were improved with the completion of a new port and fishing terminal at Vacamonte in 1979. There are extensive timber resources, notably mahogany.

Industries include a petroleum refinery, breweries, producers of cement and other construction material, sugar mills, paper and food processing. Panama has an oil refining capacity of 100,000 b.p.d. and in 1981 received a $6.5 million loan from the World Bank to finance further oil exploration surveys in the Gulf of Panama. The Cerro Colorado copper deposits are estimated to be the fifth largest in the world. The project should provide some 10,000 jobs in the construction stage, and an eventual 2,000 permanent posts. The principal exports are bananas, refined petroleum, shrimps and sugar, and considerable revenue comes from shipping registration fees and tourism. A 138-km. oil-pipeline, linking Puerto Armuelles on the Pacific Coast and the new port of Chiriquí Grande on the Caribbean, is due for completion in late 1982. With a capacity of 700,000 b.p.d., it should relieve congestion on the Canal and provide Panama with another source of revenue. In order to reduce Panama's dependence on petroleum, the Government is encouraging the development of hydroelectric projects. With the opening of the La Estrella and Los Valles plants in 1980, hydroelectric power supplied 60 per cent of Panama's energy needs and this proportion is expected to increase to over 90 per cent when the La Fortuna scheme opens in 1984.

In 1979 the incorporation of the Canal Zone into Panamanian territory provided a new stimulus for private investment and a larger domestic market for locally-produced goods. The G.D.P. increased by 7 per cent in 1979 and 5.5 per cent in 1980, compared with only 2.7 per cent in 1978. Panama has SDR90 million at its disposal but the Government has chosen to make cuts in public expenditure and increase taxation rather than draw on the IMF's extended credit facilities. The external public debt, which grew by 41 per cent in 1978, increased by only 10 per cent in 1980.

Despite the creation of 28,000 jobs in 1979, unemployment continues to be a major problem. The official rate for 1980 was 8.8 per cent, but estimates for Colón and the poorer areas of Panama City were as high as 30 per cent. Although the services account was in surplus in 1980, the overall current account showed a deficit of $292.4 million. The Government's long-term economic policies aim to reduce the dependence of the country on the services sector by creating a broader-based economy in which mining, fishing, tourism and agriculture will be of equal importance to banking and shipping.

Transport and Communications

There is a government-owned railway and the trans-isthmus railway serving the former Canal Zone became part of the system in 1979. In 1980 there were about 7,680 km. of paved roads. The Pan-American Highway runs from the Costa Rican frontier, through Panama City, to Chepo, and will eventually reach the Colombian border. The Atlantic and Pacific coasts are linked by the 82-km. Panama Canal, a major international sea route, which carried 254 million d.w.t. of traffic in 1979. The Canal is expected to reach saturation point by the year 2010, and in 1982 the Government was to undertake a feasibility study for a sea-level channel 10 miles west of the Panama Canal. Panama's merchant fleet is the fifth largest in the world, with a total displacement of 23.5 million gross tons. Most of the vessels are foreign-owned but registered in Panama. There are plans to construct two new ports at a cost of 75.5 million balboas. Panama is well served by international airlines.

Social Welfare

The social security system provides health and retirement benefits. Both employers and employees contribute to the scheme, which is government operated. In 1981 Panama had 467 medical centres, 3,687 hospital beds and 1,693 physicians. In 1975 a new social security bill was published, proposing an increase in social security taxes to finance higher retirement pensions and improved medical treatment. In 1981, 919,908 people were covered by the national social security system.

Education

The education system is divided into elementary, secondary and university schooling, each of six years' duration. Education is free and compulsory between the ages of 7 and 15 years. There are two universities. About 15 per cent of the national budget is allocated to education. Adult illiteracy was 43 per cent in rural areas and 6 per cent in urban areas in 1980.

Tourism

Panama is a growing tourist centre with many attractions including Panama City, the ruins of Portobelo and 800 sandy tropical islands, including the resort of Contadora in the Pearl Island Archipelago, and the San Blas Islands in the Atlantic.

Public Holidays

1982: May 1st (Labour Day), August 15th (Assumption; Panama City only), October 11th (Revolution Day), November 1st (National Anthem Day), November 2nd (All Souls' Day), November 3rd (Independence from Colombia), November 4th (Flag Day), November 5th (Independence Day; Colón only), November 10th (First Call of Independence), November 28th (Independence from Spain), December 8th (Immaculate Conception, Mothers' Day), December 25th (Christmas).

1983: January 1st (New Year's Day), January 9th (National Martyrs' Day), February 15th (Shrove Tuesday), April 1st (Good Friday).

* Official holiday: bank and government offices closed.

Weights and Measures

Both the metric and the imperial systems of weights and measures are in use. In 1972 the Government announced the gradual extension of the metric system to replace all other systems by 1982.

Currency and Exchange Rates

100 centésimos = 1 balboa (B).

Exchange rates (December 1981):

£1 sterling = 1.92 balboas;

U.S. $1 = 1.00 balboa.

LEGISLATURE

CONSEJO NACIONAL DE LEGISLACIÓN

The National Legislative Council was formed in 1980 of 19 elected members and 37 members appointed from the National Assembly. It acts as an upper house.

ASAMBLEA NACIONAL DE REPRESENTANTES DE CORREGIMIENTOS

The National Assembly of Community Representatives consists of 505 members elected once every six years. There were elections in August 1978.

President: Dr. LUIS DE LEÓN.

POLITICAL PARTIES

In the elections to the National Assembly of Community Representatives in August 1972 and August 1978, no candidate was allowed to represent a political party. However, as of October 1978 the Government allowed political parties to function. Since they met the required minimum of 10,000 members, the following parties were given official recognition in June 1981, and will be able to nominate candidates for the Presidency of the Republic in 1984:

Partido Revolucionario Democrático (PRD): Panama City; f. 1978; government party; 160,000 mems.; Sec.-Gen. GERARDO GONZÁLEZ VERNAZA; Under Sec.-Gen. NICOLÁS GONZÁLEZ REVILLA.

Frente Amplio Popular (FRAMPO): Panama City; f. 1978; supported Gen. Torrijos; 35,000 mems.; Leader RENATO PEREIRA.

Partido de Acción Popular (Papo): Panama City; grouping of social democrats and centrists; 34,000 mems.; Leader CARLOS IVÁN ZÚÑIGA.

Partido del Pueblo de Panamá (PPP): Panama City; f. 1943;

Partido Demócrata Cristiano: Apdo. 6322, Panama City 5; f. 1960; 35,792 members; received 20.6 per cent of the votes in the 1980 legislative elections; Dir. RICARDO ARIAS CALDERÓN; Sec.-Gen. Lic. GUILLERMO COCHEZ, Jr.

Partido Liberal (PL): Panama City; 47,000 mems.; Leader ARNULFO ESCALONA RÍOS.

Partido Panameñista (PP): Panama City; f. 1938; nationalist, anti-communist party; 77,000 mems.; Leader Dr. ARNULFO ARIAS MADRID.

The following parties exist but did not meet the electoral registration requirements:

Movimiento Liberal Republicano y Nacionalista (MOLINARE): conservative grouping.

Partido Laborista Agraria: populist conservative party.

Partido Nacionalista Popular: Leader OLIMPO SAEZ.

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

The judiciary in Panama comprises the following courts and judges: Corte Suprema de Justicia (Supreme Court of Justice), with nine judges appointed for a ten-year term; Tribunales Superiores de Distrito Judicial (High Courts); 27 Jueces de Circuito (Circuit Judges) and 74 Jueces Municipales (Municipal Judges).

Panama is divided into three judicial districts. In the first functions the first High Court which deals with civil cases in the provinces of Panamá, Colón and Darién and the second, which deals with criminal cases in the same provinces. The third and fourth High Courts, in the second judicial district, both deal with civil and criminal cases. The third court is based in Penonomé and has jurisdiction over the provinces of Veraguas and Coclé, while the fourth is based in Las Tablas. The fifth High Court is in the third judicial district and is based in David City.

President of the Supreme Court of Justice: Lic. GONZALO RODRÍGUEZ MÁRQUEZ.

PAPUA NEW GUINEA

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Independent State of Papua New Guinea lies east of Indonesia and north of the north-eastern extremity of Australia. It comprises the eastern section of the island of New Guinea (the western section of which is Irian Jaya, part of Indonesia) and a number of smaller islands, including the Bismarck Archipelago (mainly New Britain, New Ireland and Manus) and the northern part of the Solomon Islands (mainly Bougainville and Buka). The climate is hot and humid throughout the year, with an average maximum temperature of 33°C and an average minimum of 22°C. Rainfall is heavy on the coast but lower inland. There are over 700 languages but Pidgin and, to a lesser extent, standard English are also spoken. The indigenous population is largely pantheistic but there are sizeable Anglican, Roman Catholic and Ecumenist congregations. The flag is divided diagonally from the upper hoist to the lower fly, the upper portion bearing a golden bird of paradise on a red ground and the lower portion bearing five white stars, in the form of the Southern Cross, on a black ground. The capital is Port Moresby.

Recent History

Papua New Guinea was formed by the merger of the Territory of Papua, under Australian rule from 1906, with the Trust Territory of New Guinea, a former German possession which Australia administered from 1914, first under a military government, then under a League of Nations mandate, established in 1921, and later under a trusteeship agreement with the United Nations. Parts of both territories were occupied by Japanese forces from 1942 to 1945.

A joint administration for the two territories was established by Australia in July 1949. The union was named the Territory of Papua and New Guinea. A Legislative Council was established in November 1951 and was replaced by a House of Assembly, with an elected indigenous majority, in June 1964. The territory was renamed Papua New Guinea in July 1971. It achieved internal self-government in December 1973 and full independence on September 16th, 1975, when the House of Assembly became the National Parliament.

Michael Somare, who from 1972 served as Chief Minister in an interim coalition government, became Prime Minister on independence. He remained in office until 1980, despite widespread allegations of inefficiency in government ministries and of discrimination against the Highland provinces. The first elections since independence were held in June and July 1977, and Somare's Pangu Pati and the People's Progress Party (PPP) formed a new coalition government in August.

A year of political conflict between the coalition partners led to a major cabinet reshuffle in October 1978, after which the PPP held a lower proportion of ministries in the National Executive Council. The PPP immediately withdrew from the coalition and its place was unexpectedly taken by the United Party.

Renewed tribal fighting in the Highlands, involving loss of life and destruction of crops and houses, forced the Government to declare a state of emergency there from July to December 1979. The Government was also faced with the threat of a constitutional crisis in 1979, when five senior judges resigned after the Prime Minister overrode a judicial decision and freed the Minister for Justice, who had been jailed for contempt of court. In March 1980 the Government was defeated in a no-confidence vote, the fourth in 15 months, and Sir Julius Chan took over as Prime Minister.

In December 1978 Papua New Guinea and Australia signed the Torres Strait Border Treaty. As well as delineating a new sea boundary to ensure the sharing of fish and seabed resources, it contains provisions to protect traditional rights and the way of life of the inhabitants of the Torres Strait region. Relations between Papua New Guinea and Indonesia, which had been strained in 1977 and 1978 over Indonesia's campaign in Irian Jaya against the Free Papua Movement rebels who had won sympathy with some Papua New Guineans living in the border region, improved significantly when a new border treaty was signed in December 1979. The Papua New Guinea Defence Force sent about 250 troops to Vanuatu in August 1980 after it acceded to independence, to assist with crushing the secessionist rebellion on Espiritu Santo.

Government

Executive power is vested in the British monarch, represented by a Governor-General, who is appointed on the recommendation of the Prime Minister and acts on the advice of the National Executive Council (the Cabinet), led by the Prime Minister. Legislative power is vested in a unicameral National Parliament, with 109 members elected by universal adult suffrage for a term of five years. The Council is responsible to Parliament. Local government represents over 90 per cent of the population through more than 160 councils. As part of its policy of decentralization, the Government had set up provincial governments in each of the 20 provinces by 1978.

Defence

Papua New Guinea's national Defence Force comprises two infantry battalions, one engineer battalion and other support units, a squadron of five patrol boats and two landing craft, and a fleet of four DC-3 aircraft and two Nomad aircraft. Total strength of the armed forces was 3,500 in July 1981. Defence expenditure for 1981 was U.S. $36.2 million.

Economic Affairs

Papua New Guinea's economy is based on its primary industries. Over two thirds of the population is engaged in subsistence agriculture, growing mainly roots and tubers, or small cash crop farming. After minerals, the chief exports are agricultural products, particularly copra, cocoa and coffee beans, timber and tuna fish.

A comparatively recent development is the exploitation of Papua New Guinea's extensive mineral resources, chiefly copper, gold, silver and, more recently, petroleum. The main source of copper and gold is the island of Bougainville, where copper mining began in 1972. Papua New Guinea is already a leading copper producer and the fifth largest gold producer. Development of a new mine at Ok Tedi, in the Star Mountains on the mainland, which will be three-quarters the size of Bougainville, began in 1981, with gold mining due to start there in 1984 and copper mining in 1986. The potential of another large gold deposit at nearby Porgera was being assessed in 1981. Copper is the country's main export, accounting for 40 per cent of earnings in 1980. In these sectors, as in petroleum exploration and the development of gas and hydro-electricity, foreign investment, particularly by Japan, Australia and the U.S.A., is of paramount importance.

Forestry is a sizeable activity and exports of sawn timber are growing steadily. Fishing, mainly for prawns, tuna and perch, and secondary manufacturing, of beer, concrete, gases, paint and steel galvanizing, are developing sectors, although, once again, foreign capital is indispensable. Another new venture in its initial stages in 1978 was a silk industry, for which K1.2 million was set aside in the 1978-1981 Public Expenditure Plan. Silk will be processed for use by cottage weavers and for export through the new National Sericulture Station. Manufacturing industry grew by about 10 per cent in 1980.

Japan is the second overall trading partner (after Australia) but takes the largest volume of Papua New Guinea's exports. It is the biggest customer for copper ore and timber products. The U.S.A., the Federal Republic of Germany, Spain and the United Kingdom have substantial trade with Papua New Guinea.

Favourable world prices for copper, gold and some agricultural products created a generally healthy balance of payments position from 1970 until the end of 1979. A strong positive influence is direct Australian aid, which accounted for 59 per cent of budget revenue before independence in 1972 and still contributed 29 per cent in 1980. However, aid from Australia is to be cut in real terms by 5 per cent per year under its 1981-86 programme and will amount to $A1,300 million. The temporary fall in world prices for copper, coffee and cocoa in 1978 was reflected in a low G.D.P. growth rate of 2 per cent, but producers were protected to a large extent by the stabilization funds the Government had successfully built up. Following the devaluation of the Australian dollar in November 1976 the kina was devalued by over 7 per cent, readjusted to 6 per cent in January 1977. The Government's long-term policy aims at stability and self-reliance; the anti-inflation strategy introduced in 1977 included a 4 per cent unilateral revaluation of the kina, wage indexation and extended justification procedures for price increases. The balance of payments strength was supplemented by an average annual inflation rate of just over 5 per cent from 1970 to September 1978 and the kina was again revalued by 5 per cent in December 1979 in an effort to maintain this position. A further decline in prices of all major agricultural commodities in 1980 caused an increase in rural unemployment and, together with a fall in copper and gold production to an estimated 150,000 and 14 metric tons respectively, due to lower grade ore being mined at Bougainville, led to the second deficit on the balance of payments since independence and a K25 million trade deficit. Inflation rose to 10 per cent in 1980, but fell to 7 per cent in the year to September 1981, owing partly to a drop in the price of betelnuts. In August 1981 Papua New Guinea obtained a Eurodollar loan of $100 million for development projects on terms which reflect widespread faith in the country's economy. The 1982 budget sought to eliminate growth of public spending in 1982 and 1983.

Transport and Communications

In 1981 there were 18,500 km. of roads, including 1,020 km. of urban roads and 4,800 km. of highway and trunk roads. There are 11 international ports, and regular passenger and cargo shipping services link Papua New Guinea with Australia, New Zealand, the U.S.A. and various Pacific territories. There are less frequent services to Asian ports and a cargo-only service to Europe. Papua New Guinea has an internal air service and an international airport at Port Moresby.

Social Welfare

There were four major base hospitals and 16 others, 11 urban clinics, 286 health centres and 1,752 aid posts in 1979, staffed by 200 doctors, 204 medical assistants and 3,091 nurses and aid-post orderlies. Christian missions also provide medical and health services with government assistance.

Education

Education is available from pre-school to tertiary level but shortages of staff, facilities and finance permit only about 58 per cent of children to attend community (primary) school. About one third of these continue to secondary level. Curricula are increasingly designed to permit school-leavers to return profitably to the rural areas in which over 90 per cent of the population live. School fees have recently been introduced. In 1981 there were 2,118 community schools, 106 secondary schools and 93 vocational and technical colleges. Tertiary education is provided by the University of Papua New Guinea and the University of Technology. There are also teacher training colleges and higher institutions catering for specific professional training. Estimated expenditure on education in 1981 was K$7.6 million.

Tourism

Tourism is as yet only a minor industry. In 1980 there were 38,770 visitor arrivals, of whom 22,141 were tourists, mainly from Australia, New Zealand and Japan.

Public Holidays

1982: June 14th (Queen's Official Birthday), July 23rd (Remembrance Day), September 16th (Independence Day), December 25th-27th (Christmas).

1983: January 1st (New Year), April 1st-4th (Easter).

Exchange rates (December 1981): £1 sterling = 1.295 kina; U.S. $1 = 67.3 toea.

100 kina = £77.23 = $148.54.

Note: The kina was introduced in April 1975, replacing (at par) the Australian dollar ($A). Australian currency remained legal tender until December 31st, 1975. The kina maintained its parity with the Australian dollar until July 1976, when a new exchange rate of 1 kina = $A1.05 was established. This remained in effect until November 1976, when the kina was revalued against the Australian dollar (to SA1.181) but devalued against other currencies. The November devaluation was partially reversed in December 1976 and the exchange rate was later adjusted again. The average value of the kina in U.S. dollars was: 1.310 in 1975; 1.262 in 1976; 1.264 in 1977; 1.412 in 1978; 1.405 in 1979; 1.492 in 1980. For details of previous changes in the exchange rate, see the chapter on Kiribati.

THE CONSTITUTION

A new constitution came into effect on September 16th, 1975, when Papua New Guinea became independent.

PREAMBLE

The national goals of the Independent State of Papua New Guinea are: integral human development, equality and participation in the development of the country, national sovereignty and self-reliance, conservation of natural resources and the environment and development primarily through the use of Papua New Guinean forms of social, political and economic organization.

BASIC RIGHTS

All people are entitled to the fundamental rights and freedoms of the individual whatever their race, tribe, places of origin, political opinion, colour, creed or sex. The individual's rights include the right to freedom, life and the protection of the law, freedom from inhuman treatment, forced labour, arbitrary search and entry, freedom of conscience, thought, religion, expression, assembly, association and employment, and the right to privacy. Papua New Guinea citizens also have the following special rights: the right to vote and stand for public office, the right to freedom of information and of movement, protection from unjust deprivation of property and equality before the law.

THE NATION

Papua New Guinea is a sovereign, independent state. There is a National Capital District which shall be the seat of government.

The Constitution provides for various classes of citizenship. The age of majority is 19 years.

HEAD OF STATE

Her Majesty the Queen of Great Britain and Northern Ireland is Queen and Head of State of Papua New Guinea. The Head of State appoints and dismisses the Prime Minister on the proposal of the National Parliament and other ministers on the proposal of the Prime Minister. The Governor-General, Chief Justice and members of the Public Services Commission are appointed and dismissed on the proposal of the National Executive Council. All the privileges, powers, functions, duties and responsibilities of the Head of State may be had, exercised or performed through the Governor-General.

GOVERNOR-GENERAL

The Governor-General must be a citizen who is qualified to be a member of Parliament or who is a mature person of good standing who enjoys the respect of the community. No one is eligible for appointment more than once unless Parliament approves by a two-thirds majority. No one is eligible for a third term. The Governor-General is appointed by the Head of State on the proposal of the National Executive Council in accordance with the decision of Parliament by simple majority vote. He may be dismissed by the Head of State on the proposal of the National Executive Council in accordance with a decision of the Council or of an absolute majority of Parliament. The normal term of office is six years. In the case of temporary or permanent absence, dismissal or suspension he may be replaced temporarily by the Speaker of the National Parliament until such time as a new Governor-General is appointed.

THE GOVERNMENT

The Government comprises the National Parliament, the National Executive and the National Judicial System.

National Parliament

The National Parliament, or the House of Assembly, is a single-chamber legislature of members elected from single-member open or provincial electorates and not more than three nominated members who are appointed on a two-thirds absolute majority vote of Parliament. The National Parliament has 109 members elected by universal adult suffrage. The normal term of office is five years. There is a Speaker and a Deputy Speaker, who must be members of Parliament and must be elected to these posts by Parliament. They cannot serve as Ministers concurrently.

National Executive

The National Executive comprises the Head of State and the National Executive Council. The Prime Minister, who presides over the National Executive Council, is appointed and dismissed by the Head of State on the proposal of Parliament. The other ministers, of whom there shall be not fewer than six nor more than a quarter of the number of members of the Parliament, are appointed and dismissed by the Head of State on the proposal of the Prime Minister. The National Executive Council consists of all the ministers, including the Prime Minister, and is responsible for the executive government of Papua New Guinea.

National Judicial System

The National Judicial System comprises the Supreme Court, the National Court and any other authorized courts. The judiciary is independent.

The Supreme Court consists of the Chief Justice, the Deputy Chief Justice and the other judges of the National Court. It is the final court of appeal. The Chief Justice is appointed and dismissed by the Head of State on the proposal of the National Executive Council after consultation with the Minister responsible for justice. The Deputy Chief Justice and the other judges are appointed by the Judicial and Legal Services Commission. The National Court consists of the Chief Justice, the Deputy Chief Justice and no less than four nor more than six other judges.

The Constitution also makes provision for the establishment of the Magisterial Service and the establishment of the posts of Public Prosecutor and the Public Solicitor.

THE STATE SERVICES

The Constitution establishes the following State Services which, with the exception of the Defence Force, are subject to ultimate civilian control.

National Public Service

The Public Service is managed by the Public Services Commission which consists of not fewer than four members appointed by the Head of State on the proposal of the National Executive Council. The Commission is responsible to the National Executive Council.

Police Force

The Police Force is subject to the control of the National Executive Council through a Minister and its function is to preserve peace and good order and to maintain and enforce the law. There shall be a Commissioner of Police who shall be responsible for the superintendence, efficient organization and control of the Force.

Papua New Guinea Defence Force

There shall be no office of Commander-in-Chief of the Defence Force. The Defence Force is subject to the superintendence and control of the National Executive Council through the Minister of Defence. The functions of the Defence Force are to defend Papua New Guinea, to provide assistance to civilian authorities in a civil disaster, in the restoration of public order or during a period of declared national emergency.

The fourth State Service is the Parliamentary Service.

The Constitution also includes sections on Public Finances, the office of Auditor-General, the Public Accounts Commission and the Ombudsman Commission, and the declaration of a State of National Emergency.

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

- Supreme Court of Papua New Guinea: Chief Justice The Hon. Sir BURI KIDU.
Registrar: HUBERT A. AOAE.

The Supreme Court is the highest judicial authority in the country. Appeals to it may be made from decisions of a single judge sitting as the National Court. District Courts deal with summary and non-indictable offences. In addition, Local Courts deal with minor offences, including matters regulated by native custom and are open to all races. They have limited jurisdiction in land matters. Wardens' Courts have jurisdiction over civil cases respecting mining or mining lands and offences against mining laws. Cases involving land are heard by the Land Titles Commission from which appeals lie to the National Court. Children's Courts deal with cases involving minors.

RELIGION

The belief in magic or sorcery is universal even among the significant proportion of the population that has adopted Christianity. The indigenous population is mainly pantheistic. There are many Missionary Societies.

PARAGUAY

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of Paraguay is a landlocked state in central South America. Bolivia lies to the north, Brazil to the east and Argentina to the south and west. The climate is sub-tropical with a temperature range from an average maximum of 34.3°C (93.7°F) in January to an average minimum in June of 14°C (57°F). The official language is Spanish. Guaraní is spoken by the majority of the population. Roman Catholicism is the established religion and is embraced by about 90 per cent of the population. There is a small Protestant minority. The national flag (proportions 2 by 1) has horizontal stripes of red, white and blue. The obverse side bears the state emblem in the centre of the white stripe, while the reverse side carries the seal of the Treasury. The capital is Asunción.

Recent History

Paraguay was ruled by Spain from the sixteenth century until its independence in 1811 and since 1814 by a succession of dictators. In 1865 Paraguay was involved in a disastrous war against Brazil, Argentina and Uruguay, the Triple Alliance, resulting in the loss of over half of its population. Paraguay also suffered heavy losses in the Chaco Wars of 1928-30 and 1933-35 against Bolivia, but won the bulk of the disputed territory when the boundary was fixed in 1938. General Higinio Morínigo established an authoritarian regime in 1940 but the return of a number of political exiles in 1947 sparked off a civil war in which supporters of the right-wing National Republican Party (Partido Colorado) defeated the Liberals and the Partido Revolucionario Febrerista, leading to the overthrow of Gen. Morínigo in June 1948. This was followed by a period of great instability until Gen. Alfredo Stroessner, the Army Commander-in-Chief, assumed power by a military coup in May 1954. He nominated himself for the presidency as the Colorado candidate and was elected unopposed in July. In 1955 the President assumed extensive powers and established a state of siege. General Stroessner, supported by the Partido Colorado and the armed forces, was re-elected by large majorities in 1958, 1963, 1968, 1973 and 1978.

In February 1978 he lifted the state of siege, in force since he came to power, in all areas except Asunción. The number of political prisoners in the country had fallen sharply by 1980, but the assassination of the former Nicaraguan dictator, Gen. Somoza, in Asunción in September 1980 caused President Stroessner to fear for the security of his own position, and the state of siege was reimposed. There has been continued harassment of political opposition, peasant and labour leaders. The Christian Democrat leader, Luis Alfonso Resck, was arrested and expelled from the country in June 1981 and members of the unofficial Union of Journalists were arrested and held for interrogation. Since the end of the Carter Administration, Paraguay has been under less pressure from the U.S.A. to improve its human rights record, and the use of torture is reportedly becoming widespread once more.

Relations between the Catholic Church and the Government have been strained since 1969, when the Church first spoke out against the persecution of Indians and the holding of political prisoners. The breach was widened in 1981, when the Paraguayan Bishops' Conference condemned the Army's forcible removal of some 700 Tobamaskoy Indians from their ancestral land in the Chaco to a desolate site 100 km. away.

Government

Under the 1967 Constitution, legislative power is held by the bicameral National Congress, whose members serve for five years (subject to dissolution by the President). The Senate has 30 members and the Chamber of Deputies 60 members. Elections to the Congress are by universal adult suffrage. The party receiving the largest number of votes (since 1947 the Partido Colorado) is allotted two-thirds of the seats in each chamber, the remaining seats being divided proportionately among the other contending parties. Executive power is held by the President, directly elected for five years at the same time as the Congress. He governs with the assistance of an appointed Council of Ministers.

Paraguay is divided into 19 departments, each administered by a governor appointed by the President.

Defence

The armed forces totalled 16,000 men in July 1981: army 12,500 and air force 1,000 men. The navy, which operates on the rivers, had 2,500 men, including 500 marines. There are 4,000 men in the security forces. Military service is compulsory for 18 months in the army and for two years in the navy. Defence expenditure in 1980 was 8,790 million guaraníes.

Economic Affairs

Agriculture, livestock and timber account for more than 30 per cent of Paraguay's G.D.P. and two-thirds of the population work on the land. The EEC's restrictions on meat imports, and Argentina's restrictions on timber imports since 1975, severely affected the traditional pattern of Paraguay's exports. As a result, raw cotton and seeds for industrial use, mainly soya beans, have become Paraguay's leading exports since 1976. Other crops are cassava, sugar cane, maize, tobacco and rice. Agricultural production rose by 6.4 per cent in 1979, and good crop yields were registered in 1980.

In recent years Paraguay has been industrializing rapidly. Manufacturing accounted for over 16 per cent of the G.D.P. in 1980. The principal industries are cotton ginning, timber, leather processing and the processing of vegetable oils. Favourable investment regulations, introduced in 1975, have attracted large amounts of capital. In October 1981 work began on a cement plant with a capacity of 600,000 metric tons per year, financed by a French company, and this should help to satisfy the rapidly-increasing demand for cement in the construction industry.

Paraguay became self-sufficient in electric energy in 1976, with the completion of the 190 MW Acaray hydroelectric complex, and should become a net exporter by 1983/84 when the joint Paraguay-Brazil Itaipú complex on the River Paraná is scheduled to open. This complex, under construction since 1975, has a planned capacity of 12,600 MW and much of Paraguay's share of the energy produced may be sold to Brazil in return for technological assistance for agriculture and industry. Delay on the 4,000 MW joint Argentine-Paraguay plant at Yacyretá was caused in 1981 by disagreement over the allocation of engineering contracts, eventually won by a French-led consortium. Another Paraguayan-Argentine project, the 4,000 MW complex at Corpus, was settled in 1979 by a treaty signed by Paraguay, Argentina and Brazil on the use of the waters of the Paraná. In September a state-owned oil company, Petropar, was formed to help develop the country's embryonic petroleum industry (the single refinery has increased output by only 50 per cent in its 15 years of existence).

The Paraguayan economy is the fastest-growing in Latin America, with an average annual G.D.P. growth rate of over 10 per cent from 1977 to 1980. This economic expansion has been largely due to the activity generated by the current hydroelectric projects and increased investment in industry. The trade deficit rose from $82 million in 1978 to $230 million in 1980, and the balance of payments surplus in the first half of 1981 was far smaller than in the same period of 1980. The guaraní, pegged to the U.S. dollar since 1960, has become overvalued and exports have fallen drastically following currency devaluations and increased import tariffs introduced by Argentina and Brazil, Paraguay's two principal trading partners. There has, however, been a boom in illegal trade. Inflation fell from 22.4 per cent in 1980 to 14 per cent in 1981, due to the stability of world oil prices, but a budget deficit of 1,500 million guaraníes is envisaged for 1982. Unemployment is increasing because present industrial capacity is insufficient to absorb the surplus labour from rural areas created by mechanization and the slump in agricultural exports. The country's industrialists are pressing for the Government to promote energy-intensive industries, using the abundant electricity supply to create a more solid industrial base.

Transport and Communications

In 1980 there were 441 km. of railways in use and 15,500 km. of roads, of which 1,456 km. were paved. The Pan-American Highway runs for over 700 km. in Paraguay and the Trans-Chaco Highway extends from Asunción to Bolivia. The River Paraguay is navigable from Asunción to Concepción and beyond for small vessels, and there is considerable traffic along the River Paraná through Argentina to the Atlantic at Buenos Aires and Montevideo. A 1,370-metre bridge linking the western and eastern areas of the country divided by the River Paraguay was opened in 1978. In 1980 Paraguay and Brazil agreed on a rail link, which will run from Asunción to Guafrá on the border, and is scheduled for use in 1984. The modern airport at Asunción (Aeropuerto Presidente Stroessner) was completed in 1980 at a cost of $74 million, and another international airport is to be built at Puerto Presidente Stroessner.

Social Welfare

A bilateral co-operative health service is in force with the U.S.A. and there are a number of large health centres. In 1975 Paraguay had 143 hospitals, with 3,816 beds, and there were 2,229 physicians. In 1980 the Ministry of Public Health planned the building of rural hospitals and health centres. The welfare of the Indians is the responsibility of the National Indian Institute (INDI).

Education

Primary education is free and, where possible, compulsory between 7 and 14 years of age, but there are insufficient schools, particularly in the remote parts of the country. In 1980 there were 3,425 primary schools and 519 secondary schools; there is one state and one Catholic university. Adult illiteracy averaged 20 per cent in 1980.

Tourism

Tourism is undeveloped but, with the growth of air transport and the construction of new international highways and hotel developments, efforts are being made to promote it.

Public Holidays

1982: May 1st (Labour Day), May 14th and 15th (Independence Day celebrations), May 20th (Ascension), June 10th (Corpus Christi), June 12th (Peace of Chaco), August 15th (Founding of Asunción), August 25th (Constitution Day), September 29th (Battle of Boquerón), October 12th (Day of the Race, anniversary of the discovery of America), November 1st (All Saints' Day), December 8th (Immaculate Conception), December 25th (Christmas Day).

1983: January 1st (New Year's Day), February 3rd (San Blás, Patron Saint of Paraguay), March 1st (Heroes' Day), March 31st (Maundy Thursday), April 1st (Good Friday).

1,000 guaraníes=£4.13=$7.94.

Note: Since 1960 the buying (export) rate has been U.S. $1=123.60 guaraníes and the selling (import) rate $1=126.00 guaraníes. These rates have remained in effect despite two devaluations of the U.S. dollar, in December 1971 and February 1973. In terms of sterling, the selling rate was £1=302.40 guaraníes from November 1967 to August 1971; and £1=328.32 guaraníes from December 1971 to June 1972.

THE CONSTITUTION

Following the presidential elections of February 1968, the 1940 constitution was replaced by one formulated in 1967.

The preamble to the Constitution states that Paraguay is an independent republic whose form of government is representative democracy. The powers accorded to the legislature, executive and judiciary are exercised separately and independently. The official religion of Paraguay is Roman Catholicism.

All citizens of Paraguay are equal before the law and have the right to freedom of conscience, travel, residence and religion. The freedom of association is guaranteed as is the right of workers to organize and strike. Political parties are free to operate providing they do not advocate the destruction of the republican representative system. All Paraguayans may vote in elections after the age of eighteen. No laws may be retrospective in application.

The legislature (National Congress) is composed of the Senate and the Chamber of Deputies. The Senate is made up of at least thirty members, the Chamber of Deputies of at least sixty members. The party gaining a majority of votes in the presidential election obtains two-thirds of the seats in both the Senate and the Chamber of Deputies. Legislation concerning national defence and international agreements may be initiated in the Senate. Financial, electoral and municipal legislation may be initiated in the Chamber of Deputies. Both chambers of Congress are elected for a period of five years subject to dissolution.

Executive power is discharged by the President of the Republic, who must be a Roman Catholic. He is elected by direct vote for a five-year term of office. The President formulates legislation and enacts it. He is the commander-in-chief of the armed forces and may dissolve Congress.

The Supreme Court is composed of five members who are appointed for five years by the President. The Supreme Court has the power to declare legislation unconstitutional.

In 1977 Article 173 of the constitution was amended to enable the President to stand for more than two consecutive terms of office.

THE GOVERNMENT

HEAD OF STATE

President: Gen. ALFREDO STROESSNER (assumed power May 5th, 1954; elected President July 11th, 1954; re-elected 1958, 1963, 1968, 1973 and 1978).

PRESIDENT

At the presidential election of February 12th, 1978, of the 993,547 votes cast, 890,361 were for Gen. Alfredo Stroessner and the Partido Colorado. The opposition candidates were Germán Acosta Caballero (then leader of the Partido Liberal Radical) and Fulvio Celauro (Partido Liberal).

LEGISLATURE

CONGRESO NACIONAL

President: Dr. JUAN RAMÓN CHÁVEZ.

(Election, February 12th, 1978)

PARTY	SEATS
	Senate	Chamber of Deputies
Partido Colorado	20	40
Partido Liberal Radical	6	12
Partido Liberal	4	8

COUNCIL OF STATE

A consultative body which consists of the Ministers in charge of Government Departments, the Rector of the National University, one representative of commerce, two for agriculture and one for industry, the Presidents of the Banco Central del Paraguay and the Banco Nacional de Fomento, and two retired officers, one from the army and the other from the navy.

President: Arq. TOMÁS ROMERO PEREIRA.

POLITICAL PARTIES

Legislation was passed in 1981 stipulating that, to be eligible for elections, a political party must have at least 10,000 members and a presence in a third of the country's electoral districts. Only existing parties (i.e. not coalitions) may nominate presidential candidates.

Asociación Nacional Republicana (Partido Colorado—National Republican Party): Asunción; f. 19th century, ruling party since 1940; affiliation is obligatory for all civil servants; Chair. Dr. JUAN RAMÓN CHÁVEZ; Sec. MARIO ABDO BENÍTEZ.

PERU

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of Peru is situated on the Pacific coast of South America. It is bordered by Ecuador and Colombia to the north, Brazil and Bolivia to the east and Chile to the south. The climate varies with altitude, average temperatures being some 7°C (20°F) lower in the mountains than in the coastal region. The two official languages are Spanish and Quechua. Most of the population is Roman Catholic and there is a Protestant minority. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) has vertical stripes of red, white and red, with the state coat of arms on the white stripe. The capital is Lima.

Recent History

There have been Indian settlements in Peru for over 10,500 years. The last of these ruling civilizations, the Inca empire, was ended when Spanish colonists arrived in the early 16th century, attracted by the legendary mineral wealth. Since independence from Spain, finally achieved in 1826, Peruvian politics have been dominated by dictators and intervention by the armed forces.

One such military intervention occurred in October 1968, when President Fernando Belaúnde Terry was replaced by Gen. Juan Velasco Alvarado and Congress was suspended. However, there was continual dissension within the armed forces and internal unrest provoked by government austerity measures. In August 1975 Gen. Velasco was ousted by Gen. Francisco Morales Bermúdez, who in July 1976 carried out a cabinet reshuffle in which most of the leading instigators of the 1968 revolution were removed. The new Government implemented several measures which were interpreted as a move to the right. When the severe economic crisis forced the Government to impose a 67 per cent price increase on fuels and basic foodstuffs in April 1978, strikes and rioting broke out and a state of emergency was declared.

In June 1978 elections were held to a Constituent Assembly, which had the task of drafting a constitution to provide for general and presidential elections held in May 1980. All political prisoners were freed in December and all constitutional guarantees were restored in January 1980. A landslide victory for Fernando Belaúnde Terry and his party, Acción Popular (AP), in May 1980 led to the restoration in July of civilian rule, with Belaúnde as President again, but local elections held in November showed a great decline in AP's popularity.

Congress was granted special powers of legislation for a 90-day period in 1981, during which it passed some 200 new laws, including an anti-terrorist decree giving extended powers to the Civil Guard. The Catholic Church and the left-wing alliance, the Izquierda Unida, have called for the repeal of the law under which a curfew was imposed and constitutional rights suspended in several Andean provinces following a spate of sabotage incidents. The disparity between wage and price rises increased the incidence of strikes at the beginning of 1981 but this has fallen off since the setting-up of a tripartite government, management and labour commission.

The long-standing border dispute with Ecuador over the Cordillera del Cóndor erupted into a war in January 1981. A ceasefire was declared a few days later under the auspices of the guarantors of the Rio de Janeiro Protocol of 1942 under which the area, affording access to the Amazon system was awarded to Peru. The border was eventually reopened in April.

Government

Presidential and general elections took place in May 1980 under the Constitution promulgated in 1979. Executive power is vested in the President, elected for a five-year term by universal adult suffrage (including illiterates for the first time). Legislative power is vested in a bicameral National Congress, comprising a Senate and a Chamber of Deputies, also directly elected. The President, the two Vice-Presidents and the 60 Senators are elected nationally. Members of the Chamber are elected by constituencies: 40 members representing the province of Lima and 140 representing the province of Callao and the other departments.

Defence

Military service is selective and lasts for two years. In July 1981 the armed forces numbered 130,000 men (including 51,000 conscripts): an army of 75,000, a navy of 15,000 (including 3,000 marines) and an air force of 40,000. There are paramilitary forces numbering 25,000 men. Defence expenditure for 1979 amounted to 96,700 million soles.

Economic Affairs

About 40 per cent of the labour force are in agriculture, the chief crops being sugar cane, potatoes, maize, rice, other cereals, cotton and coffee, although the cultivation of coca for the production of cocaine is the most remunerative. Livestock is raised, particularly in the mountains. Peruvian agriculture is very vulnerable to drought and the Government is undertaking a massive irrigation programme. Following the 1980 drought, Peru was obliged to import rice and sugar for the first time ever. Agricultural production, which grew by only 4.1 per cent in 1979, increased by 10.1 per cent in 1981 because of vastly improved weather conditions.

Fishing is an important factor in the economy, and in 1970 the fishmeal industry contributed a third of Peru's total foreign exchange earnings. Climatic change and over-fishing depleted anchoveta stocks by 1972/73 and since 1974 emphasis has been placed on increasing the amount of fish for human consumption as opposed to the more wasteful production of fishmeal and oil. In 1981 canned fish production doubled and there were 70 canning plants in the country.

Minerals include copper, silver, petroleum, iron ore, coal, phosphates and potash. Peru became the world's fourth largest copper exporter in 1977 and is the fourth largest producer of silver. The Caramarquilla zinc refinery was completed in 1981 and the Cobriza copper mine was expected to open in June 1982, four months ahead of schedule. The sector was adversely affected in early 1981 by widespread strikes and the fall in world prices. There are proven reserves of 850 million barrels of crude petroleum and the petroleum industry is in the hands of a state agency, Petroperú, following the nationalization of Gulf Oil assets in 1975. In 1981 production averaged 200,000 b.p.d., resulting in a surplus of nearly 50,000 b.p.d. for export. The 852-km. trans-Andean Nor-Peruano pipeline was completed in 1977 and further pipelines from the oil-fields of the north-east in 1978. In 1976 foreign oil companies were allowed to explore in Peru for the first time since 1973 and, following the introduction of attractive new oil investment regulations in 1981, agreements were made between Petroperú and three major foreign companies to carry out further exploration and development. The massive Bayóvar petrochemical complex, with 17 plants, is due to come into operation in 1982 at a cost of $1,000 million.

The energy sector needs considerable improvement; at present nearly 75 per cent of the population is without electricity. Peru's exploitable hydroelectric potential is estimated at 58,000 MW and the 1980-85 development plan envisages eight new plants in operation, with a total output of 1,200 MW.

The economy has suffered seriously since 1975 because of the fall in value of Peru's exports, an increase in imports and the extremely costly nationalization programme embarked upon by the left-wing military Government. There was a brief respite in 1979 and 1980 when, because of increased world prices of traditional Peruvian exports such as copper, silver and petroleum, there was a balance of payments surplus. However, with inflation standing at over 70 per cent annually and with unemployment and underemployment at over 50 per cent, the new civilian Government was faced with formidable economic problems. The two-year emergency programme launched in 1980 subjected the overvalued sol to a "crawling-peg" devaluation, removed subsidies from basic foodstuffs and encouraged foreign investment.

Expensive populist policies, including rural development schemes and construction programmes, favoured by President Belaúnde indicated that the 1981 budget was heading towards a deficit of over $1,000 million, so in July Congress rushed through further austerity measures, including the introduction of a 16 per cent value-added tax, price rises for public services and petrol and the selling-off of over 80 unprofitable enterprises nationalized by the military government.

Inflation fell to 54 per cent in the last nine months of 1981, although the figure for the year as a whole was still over 70 per cent. Debt servicing accounted for 55 per cent of export revenue and the G.D.P. grew by only 4 per cent 2 per cent short of the Government's target. The budget deficit for 1982 was expected to be 610,000 million soles. The 1981-85 Public Investment Programme gives priority to the productive sectors and infrastructure, particularly agriculture, social services and tourism.

Peru is a member of ALADI, the Andean Group, SELA, the OAS and the IADB.

Transport and Communications

Transport is made difficult by the terrain and internal air services are an important means of transport. There were 2,740 km. of railways in 1981 and 56,940 km. of roads in 1976. The road system is centred on the 3,400 km.-long Peruvian section of the Pan American Highway which is crossed by the Trans-Andean Highway running from Lima. A new 480-km. road, part of the Trans-Andean Highway, connects Lima and Callao with the headwaters of the Amazon. European shipping lines call regularly at Peruvian ports, the chief of which is Callao. Three domestic airlines provide internal and international services and a number of foreign airlines also serve Peru.

Social Welfare

Social insurance is compulsory and benefits cover sickness, disability and old age. There are separate systems for wage earners and salaried employees. Labour legislation guarantees conditions of employment. A new social security pension law promulgated in 1974 established a single unified scheme for all employees. An emergency health care plan, implemented in 1981, included the setting-up of a nutrition fund to help young and expectant mothers, and the building of 100 health centres in rural areas and shanty towns.

Education

Reforms promulgated since the 1968 revolution have instituted a three-level educational system. The first is for children up to the age of 6 in either nurseries or kindergartens. The second level, basic education, is free and, where possible, compulsory between the ages of 6 and 15. Higher education includes the pre-university and university levels. There is also provision for adult literacy programmes (the illiteracy rate is over 70 per cent) and bilingual education. Facilities are still limited but great emphasis is being laid on improving and extending the educational system. There are 32 state and private and two Catholic universities.

Tourism

Tourism is centred around Lima, with its Spanish colonial architecture, and Cuzco, with its pre-Inca and Inca civilization, notably the "lost city" of Machu Picchu. Lake Titicaca, lying at an altitude of 3,850 metres, and the Amazon jungle region to the north-east also form popular resorts, and tourist authorities plan to develop fishing, trekking and mountaineering holidays. In 1980 about 370,000 tourists visited Peru, bringing a total of U.S. $230 million into the country. These figures are expected to double by 1983 with the development of new resorts at Nazca, Tumbes, Cajamarca and Huánaco.

Public Holidays

1982: May 1st (Labour Day), June 29th (St. Peter and Paul), July 28th, 29th (Independence), August 30th (St. Rose of Lima), October 8th (Battle of Anzamos), November 1st (All Saints' Day), December 8th (Immaculate Conception); December 25th (Christmas Day).

1983: January 1st (New Year's Day), March 31st (Maundy Thursday), April 1st (Good Friday).

FINANCE

100 centavos=1 sol.

Coins: 50 centavos; 1, 5, 10, 50 and 100 soles.

Notes: 5, 10, 50, 100, 500, 1,000, 5,000 and 10,000 soles.

Exchange rates (December 1981): £1 sterling = 949.2 soles; U.S. $1 = 493.5 soles.

1,000 soles = £1.053 = $2.026.

Note: From 1962 to 1967 the exchange rate was $1=26.82 soles (1 sol=3.73 U.S. cents). In October 1967 a two-tier system was introduced. The exchange certificate rate, used for external trade transactions, was fixed at $1=38.70 soles (1 sol=2.58 U.S. cents) while a draft or transfer rate was established for most non-trade transactions. In the case of the latter the rates from 1970 were $1=43.38 soles (buying) or 43.50 soles (selling). Despite two devaluations of the U.S. dollar (in December 1971 and February 1973), all these rates remained in effect until September 1975, when the two-tier system was ended and a single rate of $1=45.00 soles was introduced. This was in force until June 1976, when a new rate of $1=65.00 soles was established. Since September 1976 the exchange rate has been subject to small periodic adjustments. The average rate (soles per U.S. dollar) was: 40.80 in 1975; 57.43 in 1976; 83.81 in 1977; 156.34 in 1978; 224.55 in 1979; 288.65 in 1980. In terms of sterling, the exchange certificate rate was £1=92.88 soles from November 1967 to August 1971; and £1=100.84 soles from December 1971 to June 1972.

THE CONSTITUTION

(Summary)

The Constitution was drafted by a Constituent Assembly, elected for the purpose in June 1978 and dissolved after its completion. The Constitution was promulgated in July 1979 but was not signed by left-wing members of the Assembly.

The Executive Power. Executive power is vested in the President, elected for a five-year term by universal adult suffrage. The successful presidential candidate must obtain at least 36 per cent of the vote, and a second round is held if necessary. The President has power to submit draft bills, to review laws drafted by Congress and, if delegated by Congress, to enact laws himself. He appoints a Cabinet and can dissolve the Chamber of Deputies in certain circumstances.

The Legislative Power. The constitution provides for a bicameral Congress elected for a five-year term by universal adult suffrage. The Senate contains 60 members elected on a regional basis, and the former Presidents of constitutional Governments as life Senators. The 180 members of the Chamber of Deputies are elected by a system of proportional representation. Congress is responsible for passing the budget, for approving loans and international treaties and for drafting and passing bills. The Chamber of Deputies may question and censure the Cabinet and its individual members.

The Electoral System. All citizens over the age of 18, including illiterates, are eligible to vote.

The Judicial Power. The constitution provides for the establishment of a National Court of the Judiciary, a Ministry of Justice and a nine-member constitutional court.

The constitution states that "the economic order of the republic is based on the principle of social justice, which recognizes work as the main source of wealth and as the means of self-realization of human beings". The state promotes economic and social development by raising productivity, using resources rationally and distributing income justly. Private initiative is allowed within the framework of a social market economy, but monopolies, oligopolies, hoarding and restrictive practices are expressly forbidden.

Clauses abolishing the death penalty, limiting the jurisdiction of military tribunals and recognizing certain human and political rights, including the right to strike were immediately effective.

THE PRESS

DAILIES

The press was nationalized in 1974 and returned to private ownership in 1980, although all newspapers were in severe financial straits. In 1981 Congress introduced legislation providing for compensation payable to newspaper companies for the deterioration of their capital stock during the six-year closure.

THE PHILIPPINES

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of the Philippines lies in the Pacific Ocean east of South-East Asia. Kalimantan (Borneo) is to the south-west and New Guinea to the south-east. The principal islands of the Philippine archipelago are Luzon in the north and Mindanao in the south. Between them lie the 7,000 islands of the Visayas. The climate is maritime and tropical with high humidity. There is abundant rainfall and there are occasional typhoons. There are numerous language groups. Pilipino, based on Tagalog, is the native national language. English is widely spoken, but the use of Spanish has declined. Ninety per cent of the population is Christian (85 per cent Roman Catholic) and 7 per cent Muslim. The national flag (proportions 2 by 1) has two equal horizontal bands of blue and red with a gold sun and three stars on a white triangle next to the staff. The capital is Manila.

Recent History

The Philippines was formerly a Spanish colony. After the Spanish-American War of 1898, Spain ceded the islands to the U.S.A. A Constitution, ratified by plebiscite in May 1935, gave the Philippines internal self-government and provided for independence after 10 years. During the Second World War the islands were occupied by Japanese forces from 1942 to 1945 but, after Japan's surrender, U.S. rule was restored. The Philippines became an independent republic on July 4th, 1946, with Manuel Roxas as its first President. A succession of Presidents, under the control of U.S. economic interests and the Filipino landowning class, did little to help the peasant majority or to curb disorder and political violence.

At elections in November 1965 the incumbent President, Diosdado Macapagal of the Liberal Party, was defeated by Ferdinand Marcos of the Nacionalista Party. Rapid development of the economy and infrastructure followed. President Marcos was re-elected in 1969. His second term was marked by civil unrest and economic difficulties. Guerrilla activity, by the communist New People's Army (NPA) in the north and the Moro National Liberation Front (MNLF), a Muslim separatist movement, in the south, was also on the increase in the early 1970s.

In September 1972 President Marcos declared martial law in order to deal with subversive activity and introduce drastic reforms. Congress was suspended, opposition leaders arrested, the private armies of the landed oligarchs disbanded, stringent press censorship introduced and Marcos began to rule by decree. A new Constitution was promulgated in January 1973, but four referenda held between 1973 and 1977 gave overwhelming mandates to President Marcos for the continuation of martial law.

Criticism of President Marcos became more widespread with the conviction in November 1977 of the opposition leader, Benigno Aquino Jr., on a murder charge. At the end of 1976 relations with the Roman Catholic Church deteriorated after actions were taken by the authorities against liberal critics of the regime within the church. However, President Marcos allowed some relaxation of martial law in 1977 and elections to the interim National Assembly were held in April 1978. Opposition parties were allowed to participate but the pro-Marcos New Society Movement won an overwhelming majority of the seats, and President Marcos was confirmed as Prime Minister in June. In September 1979 an amnesty for 1,500 political prisoners was announced. In January 1980 the first local elections to be held in eight years took place, with sweeping victories for the New Society Movement. In May Benigno Aquino was released from jail to undergo medical treatment in the U.S.A. and, failing to return to the Philippines, made known his renewed opposition to Marcos' regime. In August the two main traditional parties, the Nacionalistas and the Liberals, joined forces to produce a manifesto calling for an end to martial law. During 1980 there were several terrorist attacks, notably the bombing of a tourist conference in Manila in October by an urban guerrilla group, the April 6 Liberation Movement. As a result, Marcos ordered the arrest of 30 oppositionists, including Aquino and Mrs. Eva Kalaw, a former senator accused in June of plotting a coup against Marcos.

Negotiations with the MNLF in December 1976 produced a ceasefire agreement and Marcos agreed to the establishment of an autonomous Muslim region in the south. The referendum called in the 13 provinces concerned (only five of which have Muslim majorities) rejected the MNLF plan and violence broke out again in Mindanao and Sulu, escalating into civil war during 1977. Elections held in Mindanao in May 1979, in an attempt to establish partial autonomy in the region, were boycotted by the MNLF, with the result that the New Society Movement won a landslide victory. Following the elections, regional Legislative Councils were set up in West and South Mindanao. The Government continues, however, to face serious insurgency problems. Hostilities intensified again in early 1981, resulting in almost 2,000 deaths in the Southern Provinces.

In January 1981 martial law was lifted and hundreds of prisoners were freed. However, critics claimed that Marcos had retained most of his former powers. In April constitutional amendments permitting President Marcos to renew his mandate by direct popular vote and to nominate a separate Prime Minister were overwhelmingly approved by referendum. The Presidential election was held in June, and (amidst allegations of electoral malpractice and an attempted boycott by the opposition grouping, UNIDO) President Marcos was returned to office for a six-year term, having secured 88 per cent of the vote. The Finance Minister, César Virata, was formally appointed to the post of Prime Minister, and a cabinet reshuffle was carried out. In October serious rioting by students opposed to President Marcos took place in Manila.

While the foreign policy of the Philippines has traditionally been in support of the U.S.A., the Marcos Government moved towards a policy of non-alignment during the 1970s, establishing diplomatic relations with its communist neighbours. In January 1979 a new agreement on the maintenance of the U.S. bases in the Philippines was signed, confirming the Philippines' sovereignty over the base areas and providing for continuing U.S. military and development assistance. The Philippines is a member of ASEAN.

Government

Between 1972 and January 1981 the Philippines was under martial law and the definitive provisions of the 1973 Constitution (see under Constitution) were not implemented. Transitional provisions gave the incumbent President (Ferdinand Marcos) full executive powers, without any fixed term of office. In January 1981 martial law was lifted, although amendments to the 1973 Constitution providing for presidential powers of decree were retained. The President is also Commander-in-Chief of the armed forces and governs with the assistance of a Prime Minister and an appointed Cabinet. The interim National Assembly (Batasang Pambansa), provided for by amendments to the transitional provisions of the Constitution, passed in 1976, was convened in June 1978. It has 200 members, of whom 165 were directly elected. The remaining 35 seats are held by the President, 20 members of his Cabinet and 14 members indirectly elected by youth, agriculture and labour organizations. In January 1981 the Assembly assumed formal legislative powers. Elections for a full National Assembly are scheduled for 1984. Local government is by "citizens' assemblies" (Barangays) and twelve regional councils under the Ministry of Local Government.

Defence

The armed forces were estimated to total 112,800 in July 1981, comprising an army of 70,000, navy of 26,000 and air force of 16,800. There is also a constabulary of 43,500 and a civil home defence force of 65,000. Defence expenditure for 1981 amounted to 6,600 million pesos.

Economic Affairs

Agriculture, forestry and fishing employed 51 per cent of the labour force in 1978 and provided 23 per cent of G.D.P. in 1980. Principal exports include coconut oil, copra, timber and sugar. These commodities, however, are vulnerable to fluctuating prices on the world market. In 1980, although the volume of coconut oil exports increased by 13 per cent over 1979, the value of exports dropped by 23 per cent. The value of copra exports fell by 46 per cent. This trend continued in 1981, and the sugar and timber markets were also depressed. The Government therefore aims to shift the emphasis from export of raw materials to export of finished and semi-finished products.

In 1973 the Government launched the "Masagana 99" programme which aimed at increasing rice yields and achieving self-sufficiency in this crop, and in 1977 the rice harvest was, for the first time, enough for domestic consumption. In 1978 rice production achieved a small exportable surplus and in 1980 there was a record crop of an estimated 7.4 million metric tons, mainly as a result of heavy investment in irrigation programmes, rural credit schemes, fertilizer subsidies and regular increases in paddy prices. Total agricultural growth, however, declined from 5.3 per cent in 1979 to 4.4 per cent in 1980.

Manufacturing accounted for 25.6 per cent of G.D.P. in 1980. The principal industries are food processing, electronic and electrical equipment, chemicals, petroleum refining and textiles. Manufactured goods accounted for 33 per cent of total exports in 1980. Copper remains one of the country's largest export earners, and gold and nickel production is becoming increasingly important. The industrial sector expanded by 5.9 per cent in 1980 (against 6.8 per cent in 1979), partly as a result of increased mineral output.

In 1978 significant deposits of petroleum were confirmed off the island of Palawan. However, in 1980 the cost of petroleum imports rose by 65 per cent, compared with 1979, and accounted for 32 per cent of the total import bill. In an effort to reduce dependence on petroleum as the primary source of energy, an ambitious five-year energy programme was launched in 1981. By 1985 geothermal power, coal and hydroelectricity should account for about 16, 15 and 14 per cent respectively of total energy requirements.

Inflation reached a rate of 40 per cent in 1974, but from 1975 to 1978 the annual inflation rate in Manila averaged about 7 per cent. As a result of rising petroleum prices, the rate stood at 11.1 per cent in March 1981. The Philippines has recorded balance of payments deficits since 1974. The visible trade deficit reached U.S. $1,900 million in 1980, although export earnings increased by 26 per cent, partly owing to rising commodity prices for copper, nickel and gold. The growth rate of G.N.P. in real terms fell to the 1975 level of 5.8 per cent in 1978 and 1979, and dropped to 4.7 per cent in 1980. A slight improvement was expected in 1981.

The 1983-87 Five-Year Plan aims for an annual growth rate of 6.5 per cent, and gives priority to food production, energy development, rural development, education and health services.

Transport and Communications

In June 1979 the Philippines had 78,873 km. of surfaced roads. The railway system, with over 1,800 km. of lines, is confined to the island of Luzon, with a few kilometres on the island of Panay. Bus services provide the most widely used form of inland transport. Shipping plays a considerable role in carrying passengers and cargo between the islands. There are 94 national and 496 municipal ports. Philippine Air Lines maintains domestic and international air services and there are two major international airports at Manila and Mactan, in Cebu.

Social Welfare

Government social insurance provides cover for retirement and life. Employed persons contribute to the scheme from their wages. Public health services such as inoculation and vaccination are provided free in the State Dispensaries. In 1975 the Philippines had 1,038 hospitals, with 76,230 beds, and there were 13,480 physicians.

Education

There is free primary education. Total enrolment in elementary schools in 1978/79 was 8.2 million. The education budget for 1979 was 3,500 million pesos. Instruction is in both English and Pilipino. There are 63 universities and nearly 1,000 colleges. Among the population aged 10 and over, the average illiteracy rate in 1975 was 10.7 per cent.

THE PHILIPPINES

Tourism

Tourism is a rapidly expanding sector of the Philippines' economy. In 1979 there were 966,873 visitors, a rise of 12.5 per cent over 1978. A five-year tourism development plan, with an estimated investment requirement of 5,697 million pesos, was launched in 1976. Chief attractions are the warm climate, the tropical setting of the islands and the cosmopolitan city of Manila.

Exchange rates (December 1981): £1 sterling = 15.56 pesos; U.S. $1 = 8.09 pesos.

100 Philippine pesos = £6.43 = $12.36.

Note: Prior to January 1962 the official exchange rate was U.S. $1 = 2.00 pesos but other rates were effective for certain transactions. The multiple exchange rate system was ended in January 1962, when a free market was introduced. In May 1962 the free rate stabilized at $1 = 3.90 pesos (1 peso = 25.64 U.S. cents) and this became the par value in November 1965. In February 1970 a free market was re-introduced and the peso "floated" downward. The average market rate (pesos per U.S. dollar) was 6.432 in 1971; 6.671 in 1972; 6.756 in 1973; 6.788 in 1974; 7.248 in 1975; 7.440 in 1976; 7.403 in 1977; 7.366 in 1978; 7.378 in 1979; 7.511 in 1980. In terms of sterling, the exchange rate between November 1967 and February 1970 was £1 = 9.36 pesos.

POLITICAL PARTIES

After the proclamation of martial law in September 1972 no political parties were authorized to operate. The ban was lifted in January 1978 and elections for an interim National Assembly (Batasang Pambansa) were held in April. Taking part were the New Society Movement, Lakas Ng Bayan-Lasan and Pusyong Bisaya Party. A presidential election held in June 1981 after the lifting of martial law was partially boycotted by the opposition.

Lakas Ng Bayan—Laban (People's Power Movement—Fight): major opposition grouping comprising many members of the former Liberal Party and other anti-Marcos elements, led by BENIGNO AQUINO, JR.; boycotted the 1980 provincial, municipal and local elections in protest against martial law; Chair. LORENZO TANADA.

Liberal Party: Manila; f. 1946; represents the centre-liberal opinion of the old Partido Nacionalista, which split in 1946; boycotted the 1980 provincial, municipal and local elections in protest against martial law; Pres. Senator GERARDO ROXAS.

Nacionalista Party: Manila; f. 1907; represents the right wing of the former Partido Nacionalista, which split in two in 1946; split into two factions in 1981, led by JOSE ROY and JOSE B. LAUREL respectively.

National Union for Liberation (NUL): f. 1979; Leader DIOSDADO MACAPAGAL.

New Society Movement (Kilusan Bagong Lipunan): formed in early 1978 by supporters of the former Nacionalista Party and the Marcos Administration; led by FERDINAND E. MARCOS.

Pusyong Bisaya Party: won 13 seats in the Visayas region of the Central Philippines in 1978 elections; split into two factions in 1981, led by BARTOLOME CABANGBANG and MARIANO LOGARTA respectively.

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

Supreme Court: Composed of a Chief Justice and 14 Associate Justices. The Court sits en banc and in two divisions. Cases involving the constitutionality of a treaty, law or executive agreement are decided en banc. To declare a treaty, law or executive agreement unconstitutional, or to impose the death penalty, at least ten Justices must concur. In other cases heard en banc, the concurrence of at least eight Justices is required for a decision. Cases heard by division are decided by the concurrence of at least five Justices; if the required number is not obtained, the Chief Justice sits with the division concerned.

The Court's powers include the supervision of the administration of all courts and their personnel; the promulgation of rules on pleading, practice and procedure in all courts; admission to the practice of law and the integration of the Bar which, however, may be repealed, altered or supplemented by the National Assembly.

Chief Justice: ENRIQUE M. FERNANDO.

Court of Appeals: Consists of a Presiding Justice, and 44 Associate Justices.

Presiding Justice: RAMON GAVIOLA.

In August 1981 lower courts were abolished and replaced by special trial and new appeal courts. President Marcos was given the power to appoint new judges.

THE PRESS

The Philippines had a large and diverse press, with about 15 metropolitan dailies and 175 weeklies, before the imposition of martial law by President Marcos in September 1972, when all newspapers and radio stations were shut down. A number of reporters, editors and publishers were arrested, and before publication could be resumed the Government's Mass Media Council had to screen staff and give its authorization. The strict controls on content and comment were gradually relaxed, and the Mass Media Council was replaced in May 1973 by a Media Advisory Council, composed of representatives of the various media. In November 1974 controls were further relaxed with the abolition of the Media Advisory Council and its replacement by the all-civilian Philippine Council for Print Media (P.C.P.M.). In January 1981 this too was abolished, coinciding with the lifting of martial law. Newspapers are expected to publish only what the President described as news of "positive national value" and to eschew sensationalism.

FINANCE

BANKING

(cap. = capital; p.u. = paid up; dep. = deposits; m. = million; brs. = branches; amounts in pesos)

The Central Bank of the Philippines supervises the entire financial system.

The financial structure consists of: (1) the banking system: commercial banks, thrift banks (savings and mortgage banks, stock savings and loan associations and private development banks), regional unit banks (rural banks), and specialized and unique government banks such as the Development Bank of the Philippines, and the Land Bank of the Philippines; (2) non-bank financial intermediaries: investment houses and companies, securities dealers, financing companies, fund managers, pawnshops and lending investors. Legislation passed in September 1976 permitted the establishment of off-shore banks in the Philippines. By mid-1980 20 foreign banks had been authorized to operate off-shore banking units.

RURAL BANKS

Small private banks established with the encouragement and assistance (both financial and technical) of the Government in order to promote and expand the rural economy in an orderly manner. Conceived mainly to stimulate the productive capacities of small farmers, small merchants and small industrialists in rural areas, and to combat usury, their principal objectives are to place within easy reach and access of the people credit facilities on reasonable terms and, in co-operation with other agencies of the Government, to provide advice on business and farm management and the proper use of credit for production and marketing purposes. The nation's rural banking system consisted of 1,000 units in December 1979.

PUERTO RICO

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Commonwealth of Puerto Rico comprises the island of Puerto Rico and three smaller islands, lying about 50 miles (80 km.) east of Hispaniola (Haiti and the Dominican Republic) in the outer Caribbean. The climate is maritime-tropical, with a mean temperature of 76°F (24.4°C); however, temperatures range from 63°F (17°C) to 96°F (36°C). The official language is Spanish but English is widely spoken. About 85 per cent of the population are Roman Catholic, most of the remainder belonging to Protestant denominations. The Commonwealth flag (proportions 5 by 3) has five alternating red and white horizontal stripes of equal width, with a blue triangle, in the centre, next to the staff. The capital is San Juan.

Recent History

Puerto Rico was a Spanish colony for 400 years until 1898 when it was ceded to the U.S.A. American citizenship was granted in 1917 and in 1947 Puerto Rico was given the right to elect its own Governor. In 1952 a Constitution was promulgated by which the island attained the status of a self-governing "Commonwealth" associated with the United States. In a plebiscite held in 1967, 60.5 per cent of voters ratified a continuation of Commonwealth status in preference to independence (0.6 per cent) or incorporation as a State of the United States (38.9 per cent). In the general elections of 1972 the Popular Democratic Party (PPD), under the leadership of Rafael Hernández Colón, regained the governorship and legislative control from the New Progressive Party (PNP), which had been in power from 1968. However, the 1976 elections were won by the PNP led by Carlos Romero Barceló, an advocate of statehood, who became Governor.

Since 1974 there has been an increase in militant nationalism, including terrorist attacks in the U.S.A. by the Fuerzas Armadas de Liberación Nacional (FALN) and other groups demanding independence for Puerto Rico. Following a two-year postponement because of objections by the U.S.A., a debate on Puerto Rican independence was held in August 1978 by the UN Decolonization Committee, which approved a resolution recognizing "the inalienable right of the Puerto Rican people to self-determination and independence" and called for the U.S. to withdraw from Puerto Rico prior to any plebiscite on the island's future. In August 1981 the Committee resolved that the UN General Assembly should consider whether the island should be viewed as a "non-self-governing territory", whereby the U.S. could be required to submit to a yearly review of its treatment of Puerto Rico.

Romero Barceló, who had promised a referendum on statehood if re-elected for a further term in 1980, abandoned this plan following the election result, in which he defeated former Governor Hernández Colón by a margin of only 3,500 votes of 1.6 million votes cast, and the opposition PPD gained control of the Senate and the House of Representatives. During 1981 eight Cabinet Secretaries and numerous senior government officials resigned, leading to rumours of dissension within the PNP and dissatisfaction with Romero Barceló's leadership. In January 1982 President Reagan declared himself in favour of statehood for Puerto Rico subject to majority support by the islanders and Romero Barceló expressed hope that a plebiscite would be held by 1985.

Government

Executive power is vested in a Governor, elected by universal adult suffrage for a four-year term, and a Cabinet of fifteen Secretaries. The Legislature is the bi-cameral Legislative Assembly consisting of the Senate of 27 members and the House of Representatives of 51 members elected by direct vote for four-year terms. A Resident Commissioner, elected for a four-year term, represents Puerto Rico in the U.S. House of Representatives but has only committee voting privileges. Puerto Ricans are citizens of the United States, but those resident in Puerto Rico do not participate in Congressional or Presidential elections.

Defence

The United States and Puerto Rico have a common defence policy.

Economic Affairs

Puerto Rico has few natural resources, although deposits of copper and nickel have been identified. Prospects exist for petroleum exploration, and in 1980 the U.S. Government gave Puerto Rico jurisdiction to 10 miles offshore. Government-financed exploration of onshore sites was expected to begin in 1981. An intensive government-sponsored programme of industrialization has changed the country's economy from an agricultural to a mixed one. Manufacturing is the main source of income, with textiles, clothing, electrical and electronic equipment, plastics, chemicals, petrochemicals and processed foods as the main products.

In the agricultural sector, the second largest source of income ($767 million in 1979/80), dairy and livestock product income has overtaken that of sugar, the main crop. Tobacco, coffee, pineapples, tropical plants, coconuts and sugar products such as rum and molasses are also important. Food imports, however, have remained at a high level (amounting to over 50 per cent of the island's food consumption in 1978) and supplementary plans to improve agricultural land use include the replanting of some sugar areas with rice crops and the introduction of plantain over large areas of unproductive hill land.

The high foreign investment rate of recent years, encouraged by tax incentives and duty-free access to the U.S.A., has levelled off, although the United States has continued to provide the principal markets for Puerto Rican imports and exports. The attraction of Puerto Rico to foreign investors as a source of cheap labour has declined since 1977, with the phased introduction of U.S. wage minima to the island. These were due to take full effect by 1981. In 1978 the Government introduced a new programme of industrial incentives aimed at encouraging domestic reinvestment of profits and long-term capital investment in the pharmaceutical, clothing, textile and leather industries. Similar incentives were also extended to tourism. In 1980 the Government initiated a 10-year programme to develop the island as a major free trade zone. A continuing programme of federal aid, however, which accounted for almost 30 per cent of the island's G.D.P. in 1980, was substantially reduced in 1981/82 as a result of federal spending cuts.

Puerto Rico is very densely populated, with a persistent unemployment problem. The unemployment rate, which exceeded 18 per cent in 1981, was expected to increase further in 1982 following reductions in federal aid.

Transport and Communications

The only railway on Puerto Rico is owned by the sugar corporation. There was a roadway system of 7,684 miles (12,366 km.) in 1979. There are 11 ports, the chief ones being San Juan, Ponce and Mayagüez. Internal and international air services are provided by over thirty local American and foreign lines.

Social Welfare

Puerto Rico is included in the U.S. social security programme and also has a system of its own covering health, accident, disability and unemployment.

Education

The public education system is centrally administered by the Department of Education. Education is compulsory between the ages of 6 and 16. In the academic year 1979/80 there were 716,138 pupils attending public day schools and 85,850 pupils attending accredited private schools. The 12-year curriculum is subdivided into six grades of elementary school, three years junior high school and three years senior high school. Vocational schools at the high school level and kindergartens also form part of the public education system. Instruction is conducted in Spanish but English is a required subject at all levels. There are 34 public and private institutions of higher education. The State University system consists of three principal campuses and six regional colleges.

In 1970 adult illiteracy averaged 12.2 per cent (males 10.3 per cent, females 13.4 per cent).

Tourism

Tourism has traditionally provided a major source of income ($615 million in 1979/80). Attractions include mountain scenery in the interior and fine beaches and game fishing in coastal waters. In 1979/80 1,679,340 people visited the island.

Public Holidays

THE CONSTITUTION

RELATIONSHIP WITH THE U.S.A.

On July 3rd, 1950, the United States Congress adopted an Act (Public Law No. 600) which was to allow "the people of Puerto Rico to organize a government pursuant to a constitution of their own adoption". This Act was submitted to the voters of Puerto Rico in a referendum and was accepted in the summer of 1951. A new Constitution was drafted in which Puerto Rico was styled as a commonwealth, or estado libre asociado, "a state which is free of superior authority in the management of its own local affairs", though it remained in association with the United States. This Constitution, with its amendments and resolutions, was ratified by the people of Puerto Rico on March 3rd, 1952, and by the Congress of the United States on July 3rd, 1952; and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico was established on July 25th, 1952.

Under the terms of the political and economic union between the United States and Puerto Rico, United States citizens in Puerto Rico enjoy the same privileges and immunities as if Puerto Rico were a member state of the Union. Puerto Rican citizens are citizens of the United States and may freely enter and leave that country.

The Congress of the United States has no control of, and may not intervene in, the internal affairs of Puerto Rico.

Puerto Rico is exempted from the tax laws of the United States. While it has no representation in the United States Congress, the Puerto Rican Resident Commissioner to the United States, directly elected for a four-year term, enjoys the privileges of membership, without voting, of the House of Representatives of the United States Congress.

There are no customs duties between the United States and Puerto Rico. Foreign products entering Puerto Rico—with the single exception of coffee, which is subject to customs duty in Puerto Rico, but not in the United States—pay the same customs duties as would be paid on their entry into the United States.

The United States social security system is extended to Puerto Rico except for unemployment insurance provisions. Laws providing for economic co-operation between the Federal Government and the States of the Union for the construction of roads, schools, public health services and similar purposes are extended to Puerto Rico. Such joint programmes are administered by the Commonwealth Government.

Amendments to the Constitution are not subject to approval by the U.S. Congress, provided that they are consistent with the U.S. Federal Constitution, the Federal Relations Act defining federal relations with Puerto Rico, and Public Law No. 600. Subject to these limitations, the Constitution may be amended by a two-thirds vote of the Puerto Rican Legislature and by the subsequent majority approval of the electorate.

The Constitution starts with a definition of democracy and continues with a Bill of Rights.

BILL OF RIGHTS

No discrimination shall be made on account of race, colour, sex, birth, social origin or condition, or political or religious ideas. Suffrage shall be direct, equal and universal for all over the age of 18. Public property and funds shall not be used to support schools other than State schools. The death penalty shall not exist. The rights of the individual, of the family and of property are guaranteed. The Constitution establishes trial by jury in all cases of felony, as well as the right of habeas corpus. Every person is to receive free elementary and secondary education. Social protection is to be afforded to the old, the disabled, the sick and the unemployed.

THE LEGISLATIVE POWER

The Legislative Assembly consists of two houses, whose members are elected by direct vote for a four-year term. The Senate is composed of 27 members, the House of Representatives of 51 members. Senators must be over 30 years of age, and Representatives over 25 years of age. The Constitution guarantees the minority parties additional representation in the Legislature, which may fluctuate from a quarter to a third of the seats in each house.

The Senate elects a President and the House of Representatives a Speaker from their respective members. The sessions of each house are public. A majority of the total number of members of each house constitutes a quorum. Either house can initiate legislation, though Bills for raising revenue must originate in the House of Representatives. Once passed by both Houses, a Bill is submitted to the Governor, who can either sign it into law or return it, with his reasons for refusal, within ten days. If it is returned, the Houses may pass it again by a two-thirds majority, in which case the Governor must accept it.

The House of Representatives, or the Senate, can impeach one of its members for treason, bribery, other felonies and "misdemeanours involving moral turpitude". A two-thirds majority is necessary before an indictment may be brought. The cases are tried by the Senate. If a representative or senator is declared guilty, he is deprived of his office and becomes punishable by law.

THE EXECUTIVE

The Governor, who must be at least 35 years of age, is elected by direct suffrage and serves for four years. He is responsible for the execution of laws, is commander-in-chief of the militia, and has the power to proclaim martial law. At the beginning of every regular session of the assembly, in January, he presents a report on the state of the treasury, and on proposed expenditure. To assist him, the Governor chooses his Secretaries of Departments, subject to the approval of the Legislative Assembly. These are led by the Secretary of State, who replaces the Governor at need.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT

The island is divided into 78 municipal districts for the purposes of local administration. The municipalities comprise not only urban areas but also the surrounding neighbourhood. They are governed by a mayor and a municipal assembly, both elected for a four-year term.

QATAR

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The State of Qatar occupies a peninsula on the west coast of the Arabian Gulf. The climate is exceptionally hot and humid in the summer and mild in the winter. Rainfall is negligible. The official language is Arabic, though English is spoken in business, official and government circles. Almost all the inhabitants are Muslims, the native Qataris being mainly of the Wahhabi sect. The national flag (proportions 30 by 11) is maroon and white, with a nine-point zigzag interlock. The capital is Doha.

Recent History

Qatar became an independent sovereign state on September 1st, 1971, after being protected since 1916 by treaties and agreements with Britain. In February 1972 the Prime Minister, Sheikh Khalifa bin Hamad al-Thani, deposed his cousin the Amir, Sheikh Ahmad, in a bloodless coup, and has since adopted a policy of wide-ranging social and economic reform. Qatar condemned the Camp David Agreements between Egypt, Israel and the U.S.A. in September 1978, but is closely allied with Saudi Arabia and is usually considered as one of the more moderate Arab States. In early 1981 Qatar joined the newly-established Gulf Co-operation Council.

Government

Qatar is an absolute monarchy, with full powers vested in the Amir as Head of State. A provisional constitution came into effect in July 1970. Executive power resides in the Council of Ministers, which is appointed by the Head of State, who is also Prime Minister. An Advisory Council with 20 nominated members was set up in April 1972, and was expanded to 30 members in December 1975. Qatar has no legislature or political parties.

Defence

Armed forces consisted of 9,700 men in July 1981, with an army of 9,000, a navy of 400 and an air force of 300.

Economic Affairs

Qatar's economy is dependent on petroleum, although a policy of industrial diversification is being pursued. Although petroleum was first discovered in the mid-1930s, the first exports were not made until December 1949. In 1980 crude oil contributed about 95 per cent of total exports and oil revenue represented more than 90 per cent of government income. Oil revenues were U.S. $5,200 million in 1980. Average daily oil production from both onshore and offshore operations was 442,000 barrels in 1977, 485,000 in 1978 and 508,000 in 1979. Production averaged only 470,000 b/d. in 1980 and was held back to about 405,000 b/d in 1981. Qatar secured a 100 per cent interest in crude oil operations in early 1977. Reserves will allow production at current rates for about 35 years, and petrochemicals, fertilizers, iron and steel and cement industries are being developed. The petrochemical complex at Umm Said was formally opened in February 1981. There is great potential, however, for the development of natural gas resources. Rapid progress is being achieved in implementing plans to develop the country's infrastructure, including a new general hospital, airport building, electricity generation and desalination plants, roads and a variety of government buildings. Expenditure in the 18-month 1981-83 budget was proposed at less than the previous 12-month budget because of earlier budget surpluses.

Transport and Communications

Surfaced roads link Doha and the oil centres of Dukhan and Umm Said with northern Qatar. There is a connection with the road network of Saudi Arabia, and a link with Abu Dhabi and the Gulf. The main ports are Doha and Umm Said. Qatar has a share in Gulf Air, and there is an international airport at Doha.

Social Welfare

Free health services are provided to all residents, whether Qatari or non-Qatari, and fixed monthly allowances are paid to widows, divorcees, orphans and the elderly. Government hospitals had 661 beds in 1973 and the country had 96 physicians in 1974. The Hamad General Hospital has 660 beds.

Education

Education is free at all levels and has been expanding at a rapid rate since the inception of a state educational system in 1956. Total school attendance in 1981 was over 40,000 in more than 170 schools, and 2,000 students attended the University of Qatar. In 1976/77 902 students were sent abroad on scholarships.

Note: Before June 1966 Qatar's currency was the Persian Gulf Indian rupee, valued at 1s. 6d. sterling (£1=13.33 rupees). When the Indian rupee was devalued in June 1966 Qatar adopted Saudi Arabian currency prior to the introduction of the Qatar/Dubai riyal (at par with the old rupee) in September 1966. This new currency was also used in the states of Trucial Oman (now the United Arab Emirates) except Abu Dhabi. The Q/D riyal was valued at 21 U.S. cents ($1=4.762 riyals) until August 1971. The riyal's value was 22.8 U.S. cents ($1=4.386 riyals) from December 1971 to February 1973; and 25.333 U.S. cents ($1=3.947 riyals) from February 1973 to March 1975. In terms of sterling, the value of the Q/D riyal between November 1967 and June 1972 was 1s. 9d. (8.75 new pence), the exchange rate being £1=11.429 riyals. When the United Arab Emirates adopted a national currency in May 1973 the Q/D riyal was superseded by the Qatar riyal, with the same value as the old currency. Since March 1975 the value of the Qatar riyal has been frequently adjusted. The average exchange rate (riyals per U.S. dollar) was: 3.931 in 1975; 3.962 in 1976; 3.959 in 1977; 3.877 in 1978; 3.773 in 1979; 3.657 in 1980. Since June 1980 the rate has been $1=3.64 riyals.

THE CONSTITUTION

A provisional constitution came into effect in July 1970. Executive power is put in the hands of the Council of Ministers, appointed by the Head of State, and assisted by an Advisory Council of 20 members (increased to 30 in December 1975), whose term was extended for three years in May 1975 and for a further three years in May 1978. All fundamental democratic rights are guaranteed. In December 1975 the Advisory Council was granted power to summon individual ministers to answer questions on legislation before promulgation. Previously the Advisory Council was restricted to debating draft bills and regulations before framing recommendations to the Council of Ministers.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

STATE ENTERPRISES

Qatar General Petroleum Corporation (QGPC): P.O.B. 3212, Doha; capital QR 4,000 million; the State of Qatar's interest in companies active in petroleum and related industries has passed to the Corporation. In line with OPEC policy, the Government agreed a participation agreement with the Qatar Petroleum Company and Shell Company of Qatar in 1974 to secure Qatar's interest and obtained a 60 per cent interest in both. In late 1976, under two separate agreements, the Government secured a 100 per cent interest in both companies. The Qatar Petroleum Producing Authority (QPPA) was established in 1976 as a subsidiary wholly owned by the Corporation to carry out all operations previously carried out by the two companies. In February 1980 the QPPA was merged with the Corporation.

Qatar General Petroleum Corporation wholly or partly owns: National Oil Distribution Co. (NODCO), Qatar Fertilizer Co. Ltd. (QAFCO), Qatar Petrochemical Co. Ltd. (QAPCO), Qatar Gas Co. (QGC), Compagnie Petrochimique du Nord (COPENOR), Arab Maritime Petroleum Transport Co. Ltd., Arab Pipelines Co. (SUMED), Arab Shipbuilding and Repair Yard Co., Arab Petroleum Services Co. and Arab Petroleum Investments Corp. (APICORP); Chair. Sheikh ABDUL AZIZ BIN KHALIFA AL-THANI (Minister of Finance and Petroleum); Dir.-Gen. ALI MUHAMMAD JAIDAH; Deputy Man. Dir. Sheikh RASHID O. AL-THANI.

Qatar General Petroleum Corporation (Onshore Operations): Doha; produces and exports crude oil and natural gas liquids from the Dukhan oilfield (onshore). The operation is now run by personnel seconded by the Dukhan Service Co. and by hired personnel; production in 1980 was 84.2 million barrels.

Qatar General Petroleum Corporation (Offshore Operations): P.O.B. 47, Doha; state-owned organization for offshore oil/gas exploration and production; Man. Dir. ALI M. JAIDAH; Exec. Man. MENNO SCHEPERS; Deputy Exec. Man. AHMED HASSAN BILAL; production in 1980 was 88 million barrels.

Qatar Gas Company: Doha; f. 1974; natural gas; Qatar Government owns 70 per cent and Shell the remaining 30 per cent; capital QR 400 million.

Wintershall: leads a consortium of five companies carrying out exploration.

TRANSPORT

ROADS

There are some 965 km. (600 miles) of surfaced road linking Doha and the oil centres of Dukhan and Umm Said with the northern end of the peninsula. A 105-km. (65-mile) long road from Doha to Salwa was completed in 1970, and joins one leading from Al Hufuf in Saudi Arabia, giving Qatar land access to the Mediterranean. A 418-km. (260-mile) highway, built in conjunction with Abu Dhabi, links both states with the Gulf network. Road construction is a continual process.

PIPELINES

Oil is transported by pipeline from the oilfields at Dukhan to the loading terminal at Umm Said. Natural gas is brought by pipeline from Dukhan to Doha where it is used as fuel for a power station and water distillation plant.

SHIPPING

Qatar National Navigation and Transport Co. Ltd.: P.O.B. 153, Doha; f. 1957; sole shipping agents, lighterage contractors, ship chandlers, clearing and forwarding agents at the ports of Qatar; also shipowners and repairers; land transport fleet of over 150 trucks and trailers; paid up capital QR 10.1m.

RWANDA

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Rwandese Republic is a landlocked state in central Africa just south of the equator, bounded by Zaire to the west, Uganda to the north, Tanzania to the east and Burundi to the south. The climate is tropical with an average temperature of 18°C (64°F). French and Kinyarwanda, the native language, are both in official use. About half the population follow animist beliefs, most of the remainder being Roman Catholic. There are Protestant and Muslim minorities. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) has three vertical stripes of red, yellow and green, the yellow band bearing a black letter R. The capital is Kigali.

Recent History

Rwanda became part of German East Africa in 1899. In 1916, during the First World War, it was occupied by Belgian forces from the Congo (now Zaire). From 1920 Rwanda was part of Ruanda-Urundi, administered by Belgium under a League of Nations mandate and later as a UN Trust Territory. Tribal dissensions have long been rife and in 1959 led to rebellion and the establishment of a state of emergency. In September 1961 it was decided by referendum to abolish the monarchy and set up a republic. Internal autonomy was granted in 1961 and full independence followed on July 1st, 1962. Tribal strife broke out again in December 1963 and large-scale killings (estimated at 20,000) were carried out by the Hutu against their former overlords, the Tutsi. During 1964-65 large numbers of displaced Rwandans were resettled in neighbouring countries. Grégoire Kayibanda, the country's first President, was re-elected in 1969 for a third four-year term, and all 47 seats in the Assembly were retained by the governing party, the Mouvement démocratique républicain (also known as Parmehutu).

At the end of 1972 tension between Hutu and Tutsi flared up again and continued throughout February 1973. In July 1973 the Minister of Defence and head of the National Guard, Maj.-Gen. Juvénal Habyarimana, led a bloodless coup, announced the Second Republic and set up a military administration known as the Committee for National Peace and Unity. This ruled until August, when a new cabinet, with Maj.-Gen. Habyarimana as President, was formed. The normal legislative processes were held in abeyance and all political activity was banned until July 1975, when a new ruling party, the National Revolutionary Movement for Development (MRND), was formed. Its establishment was preceded by an extensive Cabinet reshuffle in which several military ministers were replaced by civilians. The first national party congress was held in January 1976.

In a national referendum held in December 1978, a new constitution was approved to return the country to normal government in accordance with Maj.-Gen. Habyarimana's declaration in 1973 to end the military regime within five years. Habyarimana was also re-elected President (unopposed) for a further five years and there was a Cabinet reshuffle in January 1979. An unsuccessful coup attempt took place in April 1980, led by Théoneste Lizindé, a former security chief. In January 1982 elections to Rwanda's first National Development Council were held.

Government

Rwanda has been under military rule since July 1973. Executive power is exercised by the President, assisted by an appointed Council of Ministers, and legislative power by the President in conjunction with an elected National Development Council. The country is divided into 10 Prefectures and subdivided into 143 communes or municipalities, each administered by a governor appointed by the President and assisted by an elected council of local inhabitants. In December 1978 a referendum approved a new constitution, intended to return the country to civilian government (see section on Constitution).

Defence

All armed services form part of the army. In July 1981 total armed forces numbered 5,150 and paramilitary forces totalled 1,200 men.

Economic Affairs

The economy is predominantly agricultural, mainly at subsistence level, with 90 per cent of the population living on the land. Development is hampered by the high population density, with a current annual growth rate of about 4 per cent, and Rwanda's great distance from the sea. Since 1977 the amount of new land made available yearly for subsistence crops has declined and the yield from many worked areas is falling, owing to erosion and over-intensive traditional farming methods. The principal cash crops are coffee, tea and pyrethrum, of which the most important is coffee, accounting for 74 per cent of export earnings in 1979. An ambitious programme to expand tea production began in 1970, and in 1978 the African Development Fund provided a loan of U.S. $1.1 million to help finance the Ramba-Gaseke tea project, to expand the plantation and set up a factory. By 1977 rice plantations had been established in the marshy plains, while sugar cane plantations were being developed as new agricultural ventures. Hides and skins are also exported.

Minerals, particularly cassiterite (tin ore), are the main export after coffee. There are also reserves of tungsten, gold, tantalite and beryl, and work has begun on the exploitation of natural gas reserves beneath Lake Kivu, which are believed to be among the largest in the world. Industry is still in its infancy. Aside from the processing of foodstuffs there are small textile, brewing, chemical and engineering interests, but development of these is very slow. The Government is trying to expand pyrethrum growing and in 1980 opened a pyrethrum flower refinery. A tin-smelting plant due to open in 1981, costing 325 million Rwanda francs, was being built at Karuruna, near Kigali, and will be Rwanda's first metal-processing factory. Rwanda depends almost entirely on hydroelectric power and two new plants are being built at Mukungwa (due to open in 1981) and at Kitimba. All but one of the seven thermal plants were closed down in 1979 when the national electricity supply was connected to the Mururu station in Zaire, which now provides over half of Rwanda's electricity.

The priorities of the 1977-81 Second Development Plan were to achieve self-sufficiency in foodstuffs and the modernization of agriculture, the improvement of land links with other countries and the restructuring of the educational system. In the industrial sector the aim was to increase production by 16.5 per cent and create 40,000 new jobs. In 1979 G.D.P. grew in real terms by 4.2 per cent and in 1980 by an estimated 4.1 per cent.

Rwanda's main trading partners are neighbouring African states, Belgium and other EEC countries, Japan and the U.S.A. About 90 per cent of Rwandan exports and imports are carried via Uganda to the coast at Mombasa, in Kenya, and the temporary closure of the border in 1976 and during the 1978/79 Tanzania-Uganda war severely disrupted trade. Coffee and tea exports in 1978 were very low in spite of a special cargo airlift arranged to move the unprecedented backlog of stocks, and severe shortages of petroleum and cement occurred.

External development assistance is equivalent to almost 40 per cent of Rwanda's budget revenue. One-quarter of the budget is spent on development. As a signatory to the Lomé Convention, Rwanda receives aid from the EEC; other sources of aid include Belgium, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, the Arab League, UN agencies and various development banks and corporations. The Economic Community of the Great Lakes Countries (CEPGL), founded by Rwanda, Burundi and Zaire in 1976, established a joint development bank in 1980, with headquarters in Eastern Zaire. Rwanda, Burundi and Tanzania formed an organization to develop the water, power and mineral resources of the Kagera River basin in 1977.

Transport and Communications

There are no railways. A programme of asphalted main roads is being undertaken with foreign aid and there are asphalted highways linking Rwanda with Uganda and Tanzania and running between Ruhengeri and Gisenyi. The highway linking Rwanda with Butare and Burundi was being asphalted, with completion expected in 1981. In 1977 there were 8,000 km. of roads, of which 3,100 km. were main roads; 350 km. were metalled in 1981. The rivers are not navigable but there is traffic on Lake Kivu. There are seven airfields and two international airports, at Kigali-Kanombe and Kamembe. Regular flights are made between Rwanda and Bujumbura (Burundi), Cairo, Addis Ababa, Paris and Brussels.

Social Welfare

State schemes cover family allowances, accidents and pensions. All wage-earners must take part in the Social Security Scheme. The Government-assisted Native Welfare Fund provides community centres and medical services. Religious missions also provide socio-medical services. In 1978 Rwanda had 28 hospitals, 73 health centres, 193 dispensaries and 84 nutrition centres, with 7,119 beds. There were 137 physicians, 983 nurses and 659 para-medical assistants.

Education

Rwanda provides primary, secondary and tertiary education. Primary education is free and compulsory for children 7 to 15 years old, and dates from the initiation of the wide-ranging Schools Reform Programme in 1979. Schools are run by the State and by Missions but provided education for only 60 per cent of primary-level children in 1980/81. The national university at Butare enrolled 1,096 students in 1980/81 and a further 593 Rwandans went to universities abroad. In 1979 21 per cent of the state budget was allocated to education.

Tourism

Tourism is developing slowly. Attractions include national parks, Lake Kivu and fine mountain scenery. In 1979 810 hotel beds were available in Rwanda.

Public Holidays

1982: May 1st (Labour Day), May 31st (Whit Monday), July 1st (National Holiday, anniversary of independence), July 5th (National Peace and Unity Day, anniversary of 1973 coup), August 15th (Assumption), September 25th (Kamarampaka Day, anniversary of 1961 referendum), October 26th (Armed Forces Day), November 1st (All Saints' Day), December 25th (Christmas).

1983: January 1st (New Year), January 28th (Democracy Day), April 4th (Easter Monday).

FINANCE

100 centimes = 1 franc rwandais (Rwanda franc).

Coins: 50 centimes; 1, 2, 5, 10, 20 and 50 francs.

Notes: 20, 50, 100, 500 and 1,000 francs.

1,000 Rwanda francs = £5.60 = $10.77.

Note: The Rwanda franc was introduced in May 1964, replacing (at par) the Rwanda-Burundi franc, valued at 2 U.S. cents ($1 = 50 000 RB francs). This remained the official exchange rate (with a free rate of $1 = 112 Rwanda francs) until April 1966, when the currency was devalued by 50 per cent. The new par value of the Rwanda franc, fixed at 1 U.S. cent ($1 = 100 francs), remained in effect until August 1971. From December 1971 to February 1973 the Rwanda franc was valued at 1.08571 U.S. cents ($1 = 92.105 francs). Between February 1973 and January 1974 the Rwanda franc's value was officially 1.20635 U.S. cents ($1 = 82.895 francs), although trade transactions during this period were valued at the previous exchange rate. Since January 1974 the Rwanda franc has been valued at 1.0771 U.S. cents ($1 = 92.84 francs). In terms of sterling, the value of the Rwanda franc between November 1967 and June 1972 was rd. or 0.4167p (£1 = 240 Rwanda francs).

THE CONSTITUTION

A new constitution was approved by 90 per cent of the voters in a referendum held in December 1978. Below is a summary of the main provisions.

The Republic. Rwanda is a democratic, social and sovereign State. There is equality among citizens, who exercise national rights through their representatives.

Civil Rights. Fundamental liberties as defined in the Declaration of Human Rights are guaranteed.

The Executive. Executive power is exercised by the President, to whom the Government is responsible. He is elected for a five-year term of office and may be re-elected. The President shall be immune from censure and prosecution and the Secretary-General of the Mouvement Révolutionnaire National pour le Développement, the sole legal party, may act as his successor in the case of his incapacity. The President, who nominates and dismisses Ministers, presides over the Council of Ministers; negotiates and terminates all treaties; promulgates laws; exercises the prerogative of mercy; and is the Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces.

Legislative power: Exercised jointly by the President and the National Development Council, elected by universal adult suffrage. The Council may censure the head of government by a vote passed by four-fifths of its members but may not dismiss him. Such a vote would oblige the Government to change its policies or its ministers.

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

The judicial system was reorganized under the 1978 Constitution and comprises the following independent entities:

- a court of cassation, courts of appeal, courts of the first instance and provincial courts;
- the Council of State which has administrative jurisdiction;
- the Constitutional Court composed of the Court of Cassation and the Council of State sitting together;
- the Court of Accounts (Cour des Comptes) responsible for examining all the public accounts. Its organization is regulated by an organic law.

SAINT CHRISTOPHER* AND NEVIS

* While this island is officially named St. Christopher as part of the state, it is almost invariably abbreviated to St. Kitts.

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The islands of St. Kitts and Nevis are situated at the northern end of the Leeward Islands chain of the West Indies, with Saba and Sint Eustatius (Netherlands Antilles) to the north-west, Barbuda to the north-east and Antigua to the south-east. Nevis lies 3.2 km. (2 miles) to the south-east of St. Kitts, separated by a narrow strait. The tropical heat, varying between 17°C (62°F) and 33°C (92°F), is tempered by constant sea winds, and annual rainfall averages 1,400 mm. (55 inches). English is the official language. The Anglican church is the most common form of worship. The flag of St. Kitts and Nevis is a tricolour of green (next to the staff), yellow and blue vertical stripes, the yellow stripe bearing a palm tree device. The capital is Basseterre on St. Kitts.

Recent History

St. Kitts, settled in 1623, was Britain's first colonial foothold in the West Indies. The French settled part of the island in 1624 and conflict over possession of the island continued until 1783, when St. Kitts was ceded to Britain under the Treaty of Versailles. Nevis was colonized by the British in 1628. In 1816 St. Kitts, Nevis, Anguilla and the Virgin Islands were united to form one colony under the administration of a Captain-General and a Governor-in-Chief. Under the Leeward Islands Federation, formed in 1871, the unit was reduced to St. Kitts and Nevis, although Anguilla was shortly rejoined to the territory. St. Kitts-Nevis-Anguilla participated in the West Indies Federation from its inception in 1958 until its dissolution in 1962. A new constitution granted to all the Leeward Islands in 1960 provided for government through an Administrator and an enlarged Legislative Council.

After an abortive attempt to form a smaller East Caribbean Federation, five of the colonies involved became Associated States in an arrangement which gave them full internal autonomy, while the United Kingdom retained responsibility for defence and foreign relations. St. Kitts-Nevis-Anguilla attained Associated Statehood in February 1967. The Legislative Council was replaced by a House of Assembly, the Administrator became Governor and the Chief Minister was restyled Premier. Three months later Anguilla rebelled against government from St. Kitts and in 1971 effectively reverted to being a British dependency (see Anguilla, Vol. I, p. 1710), although this was strongly opposed by the St. Kitts administration.

Robert Bradshaw, leader of the Labour party (which had held power since 1952), became the state's first Premier. General elections in 1971 returned Bradshaw to the premiership, with the Labour party gaining seven of the nine elective seats in the House of Assembly. The two seats for Nevis went to the opposition People's Action Movement (PAM) and the Nevis Reformation Party (NRP), formed in 1970, which advocated the separation of Nevis from St. Kitts. In the 1975 elections the Labour Party again won seven seats, while the NRP took both the Nevis seats. In 1978 Paul Southwell resumed the government of the country, following the death of Robert Bradshaw. Southwell died in 1979 and was succeeded by Lee L. Moore.

Elections in February 1980 produced the first break in Labour government for nearly 30 years, with four seats going to Labour, three seats going to the PAM and the NRP retaining the two Nevis seats. A coalition PAM/NRP government was formed under Dr. Kennedy A. Simmonds, leader of the PAM. The change of government led to the suspension of a timetable for independence, which had been scheduled for June 1980. The NRP is opposed to independence as part of the state of St. Kitts and Nevis, and Dr. Simmonds has emphasized that the solution of differences between St. Kitts and Nevis and the establishment of a stable economic base are prerequisites for any reconsideration of independence.

Anguilla was formally separated from the other islands in December 1980.

Government

Under the status established in 1967, St. Kitts and Nevis has full internal self-government, while the United Kingdom retains responsibility for defence and external affairs. The British monarch, as Head of State, is represented by a Governor, who is required to act in accordance with the advice of the Cabinet. Legislative power is vested in Parliament, comprising the Sovereign and a House of Assembly composed of the Speaker, three (or, if a nominated member is Attorney-General, four) nominated members (two appointed on the advice of the Premier and one appointed on the advice of the Leader of the Opposition) and nine members elected from single-member constituencies for up to five years by universal adult suffrage. The Cabinet comprises the Premier, who must be able to command the support of the majority of the members of the House of Assembly, the Attorney-General (ex-officio) and four other ministers. The Premier and the Cabinet are responsible to Parliament.

Economic Affairs

The economy is based on agriculture, particularly the cultivation of sugar cane. Agriculture accounted for approximately 25 per cent of G.D.P. in 1980, of which some 17 per cent was attributable to the production of sugar and molasses. The output of raw sugar declined steadily from 42,000 tons in 1977 to an estimated 32,000 tons in 1981, as a result of smut disease. Since sugar is the main employer and foreign exchange earner, the Government is attempting to halt a general economic decline by restructuring the industry, which is state-owned, and encouraging agricultural diversification. Sea-island cotton and coconuts have replaced the traditional sugar crop on the small-holdings of Nevis.

Development of agriculture and its associated industries and manufacturing is geared to import substitution to satisfy local food markets and the tourist trade and provide raw materials for agro-industries. The main activities in the small industrial sector are sugar processing and the production of by-products, the manufacture of garments and shoes and the assembly of electronic equipment. There are three industrial estates (two on St. Kitts and one on Nevis). Fiscal and other incentives are offered by the Government to attract foreign investment in local industry.

Tourism is developing rapidly and receives considerable government support. Following the introduction of regular air services between St. Kitts and the U.S.A., the number of tourists arriving in the islands by air was estimated to have risen by 17 per cent in 1981.

Transport and Communications

There are 101 km. (63 miles) of roads on Nevis and 97 km. (60 miles) on St. Kitts. A 58-km. (36-mile) narrow-gauge light railway on St. Kitts serves the sugar industry. A state-run motor boat service links the two islands. A new deep-water port was opened at Basseterre in 1981. Golden Rock Airport on St. Kitts is equipped to handle jet aircraft and two regional airlines serve Newcastle airfield on Nevis.

Education

Education is compulsory between the ages of 5 and 14 years. The Government runs 29 primary schools and six secondary schools.

Tourism

The introduction of regular air services to Miami and New York has opened up the islands as a tourist destination. Visitors are attracted by the excellent beaches on St. Kitts and the spectacular mountain scenery of Nevis, the historical Brimstone Hill Fort on St. Kitts and the islands' associations with Lord Nelson and Alexander Hamilton.

SAINT LUCIA

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

Saint Lucia is in the Windward Islands group, lying between Martinique and Saint Vincent in the Caribbean. The mean temperature is 26°C (79°F), with a dry season lasting from January to April, followed by a rainy season from May to August. Annual rainfall is between 60 and 138 inches (1,500 to 3,500 mm.), according to altitude. The official language is English, although a large proportion of the population speak only a French-based patois. Between 85 and 90 per cent of the island's inhabitants are Roman Catholic. The national flag (proportions 8 by 5) is blue, bearing in its centre a white-edged black triangle partly covered by a gold triangle rising from a common base. The capital is Castries.

Recent History

Saint Lucia was formerly a British dependency. Representative government was introduced in 1924. The colony was a member of the Windward Islands, under a federal system, until December 1959. It joined the newly formed West Indies Federation in January 1958 and remained a member until the Federation's dissolution in May 1962. From January 1960 Saint Lucia and the other Windward Islands were each given a new constitution, with its own Administrator and an enlarged Legislative Council.

In 1951 the first elections under adult suffrage were won by the St. Lucia Labour Party (SLP). The SLP lost power in July 1964, following the resignation of some members from the governing Executive Council. The United Workers' Party (UWP) was formed from two former opposition groups and its leader, John Compton, became Chief Minister in succession to George Charles of the SLP. In March 1967 Saint Lucia became one of the West Indies Associated States, gaining full autonomy in internal affairs, with the United Kingdom retaining responsibility for defence and foreign relations only. The Legislative Council was replaced by a House of Assembly, the Administrator became Governor and the Chief Minister was restyled Premier. The UWP retained power at elections to the House in April 1969 and May 1974.

In 1975 the Associated States agreed that they would seek independence individually. After three years of negotiations, Saint Lucia became independent on February 22nd, 1979, remaining within the Commonwealth. Compton became the country's first Prime Minister.

A general election in July 1979 returned the SLP to government with a clear majority, and its leader, Allan Louisy, succeeded Compton as Prime Minister. However, in the new administration was faced with a crisis when in December Louisy refuted an agreement among the 12 SLP members of the House that he should step down after six months, relinquishing leadership of the party to George Odium, the Deputy Prime Minister. Although Louisy had the support of the party executive, his Cabinet was divided on the issue. Between December 1979 and July 1980 the Odium faction sustained a campaign discrediting the Prime Minister and his supporters, aimed at ousting Louisy. In July Louisy abolished the post of Deputy Prime Minister and redistributed Odium's Industry and Information portfolios, and Odium later announced that the two factions had settled their differences. However, a large demonstration by UWP supporters in November called for the resignation of Louisy and for general elections. At a meeting of the SLP executive in December one-third of the members were in favour of Louisy's stepping down and the issue was laid before a party convention in March 1981. The convention, which the Odium faction did not attend, voted overwhelmingly for Louisy to continue as party leader.

In April 1981 Odium and three other SLP members of the House voted with the Opposition against the Government's budget and Louisy was forced to resign. In May Winston Cenac, the Attorney-General in the Louisy Government, took office as Prime Minister with a parliamentary majority of one, Odium and two other SLP members having broken away to form the Progressive Labour Party (PLP). Cenac upheld his declared intention not to call fresh elections, despite large demonstrations in Castries throughout May and June by striking civil servants, UWP supporters and PLP supporters demanding a change of government. The Cenac Government succeeded in getting its budget approved in July, and in September survived by one vote a motion of "no confidence" tabled jointly by the UWP and PLP who accused the Government of political and economic mismanagement. In January 1982 a bill altering legislation on M.P.s' expenses produced widespread accusations of corruption and triggered off a series of strikes. Demands for the Government's resignation grew from all sectors of the community, culminating in a general strike. Cenac resigned and it was agreed that the SLP, the UWP and the PLP should form an interim government of national unity, under Michael Pilgrim of the PLP, to prepare for elections within 90 days.

Government

Saint Lucia is a constitutional monarchy. Executive power is vested in the British sovereign, as Head of State, and exercisable by the Governor-General, who represents the sovereign and is appointed on the advice of the Prime Minister. Legislative power is vested in Parliament, comprising the sovereign, a 17-member House of Assembly, elected from single-member constituencies for up to five years by universal adult suffrage, and an 11-member Senate. The Senate is composed of six members appointed on the advice of the Prime Minister, three appointed on the advice of the Leader of the Opposition and two appointed by the Governor-General acting on his own deliberate judgement. Government is effectively by the Cabinet. The Governor-General appoints the Prime Minister and, on the latter's recommendation, the other Ministers. The Prime Minister must have majority support in the House, to which the Cabinet is responsible.

Defence

The Royal Saint Lucia Police Force, which numbers 300 men, is to be expanded for purposes of defence. It has been agreed to establish a joint regional coastguard and fisheries protection service serving Barbados, Dominica, Saint Lucia and Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, with assistance from the United Kingdom and the U.S.A.

Economic Affairs

Saint Lucia's economy is heavily dependent on agriculture, which is the island's principal employer and largest export earner. The most important crop is bananas, Saint Lucia being the largest exporter in the Windward Islands, with exports valued at EC $35.6 million in 1979. Coconuts and cocoa are the other major crops. Almost the entire banana crop was wiped out by Hurricane Allen in August 1980 and the production of coconuts, cocoa and local food crops was severely affected. It is estimated that EC $97.5 million will be needed to restore Saint Lucia's agriculture.

Since 1972 there has been considerable expansion in the industrial sector and by 1979 the manufacture of plastics, garments, beer and industrial gases and the assembly of electronic components were established industries. An official industrial programme has aimed to reduce Saint Lucia's dependence on agriculture, notably by attracting foreign investment. By 1976 the effects of the programme were apparent; exports of manufactured goods represented 48 per cent of total exports, compared with 25 per cent in 1974. Development projects within the programme include the construction of industrial estates and industrial free zones, the exploitation of the geothermal energy sources discovered at Soufrière in 1976, and the construction of a giant petroleum transshipment terminal within one of the zones. An agreement was signed with a Saudi Arabian concern in 1981 to build a second transshipment facility. Several major industrial plants, including the flour mill, were destroyed in the 1980 hurricane. The importing of cement and bulk flour was taken over by Government in 1980.

Tourism is the third most important economic activity. The industry expanded rapidly in the mid-1970s, reaching a peak in the record year of 1978. However, by 1981 there was a marked slump in visitor arrivals.

The island's G.D.P. increased in real terms by 12.1 per cent in 1976, by 6.7 per cent in 1977 and by 12.9 per cent in 1978. Agricultural output rose by an annual average of 14 per cent between 1975 and 1978. In 1978 a worsening trade deficit outweighed even the unprecedented receipts from tourism, creating a deficit on the balance of payments current account. By 1981 the economy was badly depressed, with the three main sources of foreign exchange (agriculture, tourism and industry) all suffering from reduced demand. The unemployment rate remained above 30 per cent.

The IMF granted Saint Lucia 2.7 million SDRs to compensate for loss of earnings from banana exports during the 12 months ending March 1981. The Caribbean Development Bank has pledged to invest EC$54 million in Saint Lucia over the period 1981-85 and a promotional tour of the U.S.A. by the Prime Minister in 1981 produced investment commitments totalling EC$192 million. Venezuela and Saint Lucia have agreed to set up a joint commission to promote private sector co-operation between the two countries.

Transport and Communications

Saint Lucia has the best infrastructure of the smaller eastern Caribbean countries. The island has about 500 miles (800 km.) of roads. The main highway passes through every town and village on the island and a direct route from Castries to the southern coast is under construction. Saint Lucia is served by numerous foreign shipping lines. The island's port at Castries is being extensively modernized and there are plans to construct a second port to serve the industrial free zone at Cul-de-Sac. The international airport at Hewanorra has been equipped to handle large jet aircraft. There is also an airstrip at Vigie, in Castries, capable of handling medium-range jets.

Education

Free primary education is provided in over 90 government-assisted schools. There are five secondary schools, and six junior secondary schools have been opened by the Government since 1975. Facilities for industrial, technical and teacher training are available at an educational complex at Morne Fortune, which also houses a branch of the University of the West Indies.

Tourism

Saint Lucia is promoted as one of the last truly unspoiled Caribbean islands. It possesses spectacular scenery, a tropical climate and white sand beaches. However, it is only since 1966 that the island's tourism potential has been developed. The majority of tourists come from Canada, the U.S.A. and Europe.

THE CONSTITUTION

The Constitution came into force at the independence of Saint Lucia on February 22nd, 1979. Its main provisions are summarized below:

FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS

Regardless of race, place of origin, political opinion, colour, creed or sex but subject to respect for the rights and freedoms of others and for the public interest, every person in Saint Lucia is entitled to the rights of life, liberty, security of the person, equality before the law and the protection of the law. Freedom of conscience, of expression, of assembly and association is guaranteed and the inviolability of personal privacy, family life and property is maintained. Protection is afforded from slavery, forced labour, torture and inhuman treatment.

THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL

The Queen, as Head of State, is represented in Saint Lucia by a Governor-General.

PARLIAMENT

Parliament consists of the Queen, represented by the Governor-General, an 11-member Senate and the House of Assembly, composed of 17 elected Representatives. Senators are appointed by the Governor-General: six on the advice of the Prime Minister, three on the advice of the Leader of the Opposition and two acting on his own deliberate judgement. The life of Parliament is five years.

Each constituency returns one Representative to the House who is directly elected in accordance with the Constitution.

At a time when the office of Attorney-General is a public office, the Attorney-General is an ex-officio member of the House.

Every citizen over the age of 21 is eligible to vote.

Parliament may alter any of the provisions of the Constitution.

THE EXECUTIVE

Executive authority is vested in the Queen and exercisable by the Governor-General. The Governor-General appoints as Prime Minister that member of the House who, in his view, is best able to command the support of the majority of the members of the House, and other Ministers on the advice of the Prime Minister. The Governor-General may remove the Prime Minister from office if a resolution of "no confidence" in the Government is passed by the House and the Prime Minister does not resign within three days or advise the Governor-General to dissolve Parliament.

The Cabinet consists of the Prime Minister and other Ministers, and the Attorney-General as an ex-officio member at a time when the office of Attorney-General is a public office.

The Leader of the Opposition is appointed by the Governor-General as that member of the House who, in his view, is best able to command the support of a majority of members of the House who do not support the Government.

CITIZENSHIP

All persons born in Saint Lucia before independence who immediately prior to independence were citizens of the United Kingdom and Colonies automatically become citizens of Saint Lucia. All persons born in Saint Lucia after independence automatically acquire Saint Lucian citizenship as do those born outside Saint Lucia after independence to a parent possessing Saint Lucian citizenship. Provision is made for the acquisition of citizenship by those to whom it is not automatically granted.

SAINT VINCENT AND THE GRENADINES

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

Saint Vincent is one of the Windward Islands, situated approximately 100 miles (160 km.) west of Barbados, in the West Indies. The nearest neighbouring countries are Saint Lucia, to the north, and Grenada to the south. As well as the main island, the state includes the Saint Vincent Grenadines, the northerly part of an island chain stretching between Saint Vincent and Grenada. The principal islands in that part of the group are Bequia, Canouan, Mustique, Mayreau and Union. The climate is tropical, with average temperatures of between 18° and 32°C (64°–90°F). Annual rainfall ranges from 60 inches (1,500 mm.) in the extreme south to 150 inches (3,750 mm.) in the interior of the island. English is the official language. Most of the inhabitants are Christians, mainly Anglican. The national flag has three equal vertical bands of blue, gold and green, with the state coat of arms, superimposed on a breadfruit leaf, in the centre. The capital is Kingstown.

Recent History

The islands, under the collective name of St. Vincent, became a British possession in the eighteenth century. With other nearby British territories, St. Vincent was administered by the Governor of the Windward Islands, under a federal system, until December 1959. The first elections under universal adult suffrage were held in 1951. The islands participated in the West Indies Federation from its foundation in January 1958 until its dissolution in May 1962. From January 1960, St. Vincent, in common with the other Windward Islands, had a new constitution, with its own Administrator and an enlarged Legislative Council.

After the failure of negotiations to form a smaller East Caribbean Federation, most of the British colonies in the Leeward and Windward Islands became Associated States, with full internal self-government, in 1967. This change of status was delayed in St. Vincent because of local political differences. At controversial elections to the Legislative Council in 1966 the ruling People's Political Party (PPP) was returned with a majority of only one seat. Further elections were held in May 1967, when the St. Vincent Labour Party (SVLP) won six of the nine seats in the Council. Milton Cato, leader of the SVLP, became Chief Minister in succession to Ebenezer Joshua of the PPP. On October 27th, 1969, despite objections from the PPP, St. Vincent became an Associated State, with the United Kingdom retaining responsibility for defence and foreign relations only. The Legislative Council was renamed the House of Assembly, the Administrator became Governor and the Chief Minister was restyled Premier.

Elections were held in April 1972 for a new House of Assembly, with a membership increased to 13. The PPP and the SVLP each won six seats, the remaining one going to James Mitchell, formerly a Minister in the SVLP Government, who stood as an independent. The PPP agreed to form a Government with Mitchell as Premier and Joshua as Deputy Premier and Minister of Finance. In September 1974 Joshua and his wife, Ivy (a Parliamentary Secretary), resigned after policy disagreements with the Premier, a motion of "no confidence" in Mitchell's Government was carried and the House dissolved. In the ensuing elections, held in December, the PPP and SVLP campaigned in a "unity agreement". The SVLP won 10 of the 13 seats and the PPP two. Cato became Premier again, at the head of a coalition with the PPP, and committed his Government to attaining full independence from the United Kingdom. Subsequently, Ivy Joshua left the coalition and was elected Leader of the Opposition. The coalition broke down in April 1978, when Ebenezer Joshua, then Minister of Trade, was dismissed because of his opposition to continuing independence negotiations without his party's support.

After a constitutional conference in September 1978, the colony became fully independent, as Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, on October 27th, 1979. The Governor became Governor-General and the Premier took office as the country's first Prime Minister. The new state became a "special member" of the Commonwealth and is not represented at meetings of Heads of Government.

Cato's position was reinforced in the general elections of December 1979, when the SVLP won 11 of the 13 elective seats in the 19-member House of Assembly. Three days later the new Government was forced to quell an uprising on Union Island, organized by members of the Rastafarian cult.

In May 1981 Randolph Russell, the Minister of Health, resigned his post and left the SVLP, claiming that the Government was to blame for the country's economic and social decline. His resignation was followed by that of a senior civil servant. The Government's attempt to introduce repressive new legislation on public order and labour relations in the essential services sector had aroused unprecedented popular opposition. The National Committee in Defence of Democracy, formed in May with the support of various opposition parties, trade unions and other representative bodies, organized demonstrations attracting as many as 15,000 protesters and a partially successful general strike in June. These events obliged the Government to withdraw the legislation pending review. In mid-July it was agreed that the Leader of the Opposition, Calder Williams, should step down to allow Randolph Russell, now an independent member of the House, to assume the position. Russell subsequently formed a new party, the Progressive Democratic Party. An announcement by the Minister of Foreign Affairs in August that a plot to overthrow the Government had been uncovered was greeted with charges of fabrication by opposition parties. In early 1982 there were indications that the fragmented opposition was at last prepared to unite against the Government.

Government

Saint Vincent and the Grenadines is a constitutional monarchy. Executive power is vested in the British sovereign, as Head of State, and exercisable by the Governor-General, who represents the sovereign and is appointed on the advice of the Prime Minister. Legislative power is vested in Parliament, comprising the sovereign and a House of Assembly composed of 6 nominated Senators and 13 Representatives elected for up to five years by universal adult suffrage. Senators are appointed by the Governor-General—four on the advice of the Prime Minister and two on the advice of the Leader of the Opposition. Government is effectively by the Cabinet. The Governor-General appoints the Prime Minister and, on the latter's recommendation, selects the other Ministers. The Prime Minister must be able to command the support of the majority of the House, to which the Cabinet is responsible.

Defence

A co-ordinated coastguard service, in collaboration with Barbados, Dominica and Saint Lucia, is under active consideration. Saint Vincent is developing its police force of 489 for the purposes of defence.

Economic Affairs

Agriculture is the mainstay of the economy. About 50 per cent of the islands' foreign revenue is derived from the export of bananas to the United Kingdom. The country is the world's leading producer of arrowroot. Carrots and plantains are also major export crops and the islands are an important regional producer of spices and exotic fruits. Tobacco has recently been introduced with some success. Agriculture remains the principal employer, although its share of G.D.P. contracted from 40.3 per cent in 1961 to 18.1 per cent in 1978. The damage caused by the Soufrière volcano in 1979 reduced banana exports from 30,414 tons in 1978 to 22,692 tons in 1979, and in 1980 Hurricane Allen destroyed 95 per cent of the banana crop and 75 per cent of nutmeg production.

The small manufacturing sector has expanded slowly and in 1978 represented 22.6 per cent of G.D.P., including amongst its products concrete and furniture. To encourage growth in this sector, two industrial estates have been established and the Government is offering incentives such as tax exemption to foreign concerns starting operations on the islands. The St. Vincent Development Corporation was set up in 1971 to promote joint ventures with foreign investors. One of these, a flour mill serving all four countries in the Windward Islands, opened in 1978 with 40 per cent Canadian, 40 per cent local and 20 per cent government capital. It is hoped that the production of a new sugar factory to open in Mount Bentinck in 1981 will eventually replace brown sugar imports.

Tourism, though little developed by regional standards, is growing in importance. Tourist arrivals increased by almost 50 per cent in 1980 and serious attempts are now being made to cultivate new markets in Latin America as well as expanding existing ones.

The country's recurrent trade deficit was reduced in 1978 but loss of exports, due to volcano and hurricane damage, hampered trade recovery in 1979 and 1980. Saint Vincent is to receive SDR 1.3 million from the IMF to compensate for loss of export earnings during 1980.

Transport and Communications

There are 633 miles (1,019 km.) of roads, 270 miles (435 km.) of which are suitable for traffic of all kinds. The main port is at Kingstown and contains a deep-water wharf with accommodation for two ocean-going ships. A motor vessel service plies between the Grenadines and Saint Vincent three times a week. In 1978 the Government acquired two new cargo boats to improve shipping between the main island and the Grenadines. Exports are flown to Barbados to link up with international shipping lines. The airport at Arnos Vale was modernized in 1978 and can now handle night traffic.

Education

Free primary education is available to all children in government schools, although it is not compulsory and attendance is low. At secondary standard, government facilities are limited, with only one girls' high school and one co-educational school. Otherwise secondary education is provided in 11 schools run by religious organizations with government assistance. There are four junior secondary schools. There is one teacher training college and one technical college.

Tourism

The country's greatest tourist asset is the island chain of the Grenadines, which offer superior yachting facilities. Tourism has been relatively slow in developing, mainly due to the fact that the airport on Saint Vincent has not been served by the international airlines. In 1980 92,233 tourists visited Saint Vincent and the Grenadines. Visitors are mainly from other Caribbean countries, the U.S.A. and the United Kingdom.

THE CONSTITUTION

The constitution came into force at the independence of Saint Vincent and the Grenadines on October 27th, 1979.

FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS

Regardless of race, place of origin, political opinion, colour, creed or sex, but subject to respect for the rights and freedoms of others and for the public interest, every person in Saint Vincent and the Grenadines is entitled to the rights of life, liberty, security of the person and the protection of the law. Freedom of conscience, of expression, of assembly and association is guaranteed and the inviolability of a person's home and other property is maintained. Protection is afforded from slavery, forced labour, torture and inhuman treatment.

THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL

The Queen is represented in Saint Vincent and the Grenadines by a Governor-General.

PARLIAMENT

Parliament consists of the Queen and a House of Assembly comprising 13 elected Representatives and six Senators. Senators are appointed by the Governor-General—four on the advice of the Prime Minister and two on the advice of the Leader of the Opposition. The life of Parliament is five years.

Each constituency returns one Representative to the House who is directly elected in accordance with the Constitution.

At a time when the office of Attorney-General is a public office, the Attorney-General is an ex-officio member of the House.

Every citizen over the age of 21 is eligible to vote.

Parliament may alter any of the provisions of the Constitution.

THE EXECUTIVE

Executive authority is vested in the Queen and exercisable by the Governor-General. The Governor-General appoints as Prime Minister that member of the House who, in his view, is best able to command the support of the majority of the members of the House, and other Ministers on the advice of the Prime Minister. The Governor-General may remove the Prime Minister from office if a resolution of "no confidence" in the Government is passed by the House and the Prime Minister does not either resign within three days or advise the Governor-General to dissolve Parliament.

The Cabinet consists of the Prime Minister and other Ministers and the Attorney-General as an ex-officio member at a time when the office of Attorney-General is a public office.

The Leader of the Opposition is appointed by the Governor-General as that member of the House who, in his view, is best able to command the support of a majority of members of the House who do not support the Government.

CITIZENSHIP

All persons born in Saint Vincent and the Grenadines before independence who, immediately prior to independence, were citizens of the United Kingdom and Colonies automatically become citizens of Saint Vincent and the Grenadines. All persons born outside the country after independence to a parent possessing citizenship of Saint Vincent and the Grenadines automatically acquire citizenship as do those born in the country after independence. Provision is made for the acquisition of citizenship by those to whom it would not automatically be granted.

SÃO TOMÉ AND PRÍNCIPE

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Democratic Republic of São Tomé and Príncipe lies in the Gulf of Guinea off the west coast of Africa. There are two main islands, São Tomé and Príncipe, and the rocky islets of Cabras, Gago Coutinho, Pedras Tinhosas and Rolas. The climate is warm and humid, with an average yearly temperature of about 25°C (77°F). Portuguese is the official language and native dialects are widely spoken. The major Christian denomination is Roman Catholicism. The national flag has horizontal stripes of green, yellow (half the depth) and green, with a red triangle at the hoist and two five-pointed black stars on the yellow stripe. The capital is the town of São Tomé.

Recent History

A former colony, São Tomé and Príncipe became an overseas province of Portugal in 1951 and received local autonomy in 1973. A nationalist group, the Comissão de Libertação de São Tomé e Príncipe (CLSTP), was formed in 1960 and became the Movimento de Libertação de São Tomé e Príncipe (MLSTP) in 1972, under the leadership of Dr. Manuel Pinto da Costa. Based in Libreville, Gabon, the MLSTP was recognized by the Organization of African Unity in 1973. After the military coup in Portugal in April 1974, Portugal recognized the right of the islands to independence but negotiations did not take place until November 1974. Portugal then recognized the MLSTP as the sole representative of the people and it was agreed that the islands should become independent. On July 12th, 1975, the country became independent, with Dr. Manuel Pinto da Costa as its first President and Miguel Trouvoada as Prime Minister, and in December 1975 a People's Assembly was elected. In March 1978 the Prime Minister stated that an attempted coup by foreign mercenaries supervised from Gabon by Carlos de Graça, the exiled former Minister of Health, and supported by opponents of agrarian reform, had been suppressed. Angolan troops were called in to support the Government, and in March 1979 the alleged conspirators were sentenced to terms of imprisonment. President da Costa took over the post of Prime Minister, and Trouvoada (regarded as one of the "moderates" of the MLSTP) was arrested in September on charges of connivance in the attempted coups. He was released in 1981. Another alleged coup attempt was forestalled in November 1980. In December 1981 there were riots on Príncipe, following distribution of pamphlets calling for that island's independence.

São Tomé and Príncipe maintains close links with the other former Portuguese African colonies, particularly Angola, and also with Portugal.

Government

The 1975 constitution proclaimed the MLSTP as the leading political force of the nation. The supreme organ of state is the People's Assembly, a legislative body of 33 members (mainly MLSTP officials) who hold office for four years. Executive power is held by the President and the Government he appoints. The President is elected for four years by the People's Assembly on the proposal of the MLSTP.

Defence

Since independence the Republic has had control over its armed forces, of which the President is the Supreme Commander.

Economic Affairs

The economy is based on the export crops of cocoa, copra, palm kernels, bananas, coffee and coconuts. Cocoa production reached its peak at the beginning of the century, but production subsequently fell to about 10,000 tons per year due to poor soil, archaic techniques, disease and labour problems. Output fell drastically when plantation owners left the country after independence and the 28 main plantations were nationalized. However, production rose steadily to 8,000 tons in 1980 and cocoa still provided about 90 per cent of export earnings. The exclusive production of export commodities has forced São Tomé to import much of its food. Government plans include the replenishment of cocoa plantations, the creation of agricultural co-operatives, increased crop diversification to reduce the economy's dependence on the fluctuating world cocoa market and cultivation of more bananas and cassava for local consumption.

There is virtually no manufacturing industry except small processing factories producing soap, soft drinks, textiles and beer. There are plans to develop a fishing and fish-processing industry to exploit the rich tuna resources. A deep-water harbour, a cold-storage plant and extra boats are to be constructed and in June 1978 the Government established a fishing zone of 200 nautical miles (370 km.) around the coasts.

The Government's plans for economic improvement include agrarian reforms to reduce the country's dependence on imported food and incentives to encourage foreign capital to establish small-scale industries and to develop tourism. Portugal and the Netherlands are the chief trading partners, and São Tomé has close relations with Angola. São Tomé receives foreign assistance, and became a member of the IMF in 1977, when the link with Portuguese currency was broken by the establishment of the dobra, linked to the IMF Special Drawing Right.

Transport and Communications

There are no railways. In 1973 there were 287 km. of roads, and a tarred highway is being constructed around São Tomé. An EEC grant of U.S. $400,000 was received in 1978 for developing roads on Príncipe. São Tomé airport has regular services to Príncipe, Angola and Cameroon, and there are plans to extend the runway to take long-range aircraft. In 1978 Algeria agreed to build a telecommunications station and to train staff, while a ground satellite station was established in 1980.

Education

Primary education is compulsory for children over six years of age, and there were 18,000 pupils in primary schools in 1979. There is a government secondary school and a technical school on São Tomé, both with mainly foreign teachers.

Tourism

São Tomé is a port of call for some cruise liners, and tourism is being gradually developed.

THE CONSTITUTION

The Constitution, summarized below, was approved by the People's Assembly on December 12th, 1975.

The Democratic Republic of São Tomé and Príncipe is a sovereign, independent, unitary and democratic state. There shall be complete separation between Church and State. The MLSTP (Movimento de Libertação de São Tomé e Príncipe) is the leading political force of the nation and shall encourage the creation and development of people's organizations in order to guarantee the people's active participation in the political development of the country.

The People's Assembly is the supreme organ of the State. It comprises the Political Bureau of the MLSTP, the Government, 13 representatives of the Area Committees, 2 representatives of the Women's Organization, 2 representatives of the Youth Organization and 5 suitable citizens. The MLSTP chooses the candidates.

The Assembly is elected for four years and meets in ordinary session twice a year. It may meet in extraordinary session on the proposal of the President, the Council of Ministers or of two-thirds of its members. The Assembly elects its own President. In the period between ordinary sessions of the Assembly its functions are assumed by a Permanent Commission elected from among its members.

Executive power is vested in the President of the Republic, who is elected for a period of four years by the People's Assembly on the proposal of the MLSTP. He is the Supreme Commander of the Armed Forces and is responsible before the People's Assembly. In the case of the President's death, permanent incapacity or resignation, his functions shall be assumed by the President of the People's Assembly until a new President is elected.

Judicial power is exercised by the Supreme Court and all other competent tribunals and courts. The Supreme Court is the supreme judicial authority and is only accountable to the People's Assembly. Its members are appointed by the Assembly on the proposal of the MLSTP. The right to a defence is guaranteed.

The Constitution may be revised only by the People's Assembly on the proposal of at least one-third of its members. Any amendment must be approved by a two-thirds majority of the Assembly.

SAUDI ARABIA

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Kingdom of Saudi Arabia occupies about four-fifths of the Arabian peninsula, with the Yemen Arab Republic and the Red Sea to the west and the Persian Gulf and the United Arab Emirates to the east. Jordan, Iraq and Kuwait are to the north and Oman and the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen to the south. Much of the country is desert. In summer temperatures range from 38° to 49°C (100°–120°F) in coastal regions and humidity is high. Temperatures sometimes reach 54°C (130°F) in the interior. Winters are mild, except in the mountains. The language is Arabic. About 85 per cent of the population are Sunni Muslims, and in the Najd there is a preponderance of members of the Wahhabi sect. Shi'ite sects amount to about 15 per cent of the population. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) is green and bears, in white, an Arabic inscription ("There is no God but God and Muhammad is the prophet of God") above a white sword. The royal capital is Riyadh and the administrative capital is Jeddah.

Recent History

Saudi Arabia has been a member of the Arab League since 1945. King Saud ibn Abdul Aziz succeeded his father in 1953 but in 1964 full executive powers passed into the hands of Crown Prince Faisal, the Prime Minister since 1962. In November 1964 the Council of Ministers asked King Saud to resign in favour of his brother. King Faisal continued in the office of Prime Minister, and ruled the country directly through the Council of Ministers.

In March 1975 King Faisal was assassinated by a nephew and was succeeded by his brother Khalid, but no drastic change of policy resulted. The greatest threat to stability has been an attack in November 1979 by 500 Sunni Muslim "purists" on the Great Mosque in Mecca. They were dislodged only after a two-week siege, and at the same time some of the country's Shi'ite minority in the Eastern Province took advantage of the situation and created disturbances.

Since 1973 Saudi Arabia has actively supported the Arab cause, although the Government has for most of the time urged moderation in oil price increases and joined the ranks of countries which condemned the Camp David agreements between Israel and Egypt only after some hesitation. During 1981 Saudi Arabia emerged as the most influential country of the Arab world. In May 1981 the Saudis joined five other Gulf States in setting up the Gulf Co-operation Council. In the closing months of 1981 Crown Prince Fahd produced an eight-point plan for solving the Palestinian issue which, by implication, recognized Israel. The November Arab Summit meeting at Fez, in Morocco, could not agree on the plan, however, and broke up in disarray.

Government

Saudi Arabia is an absolute monarchy, with no parliament or political parties, although a Consultative Council of 50 to 70 members is under active consideration. Constitutionally, the King rules in accordance with the Sharia, the sacred law of Islam. He appoints and leads a Council of Ministers, which serves as the instrument of royal authority in both legislative and executive matters. Decisions of the Council are reached by majority vote but require royal sanction.

Defence

In July 1981 military forces numbered 51,700: army 35,000, air force 14,500, navy 2,200. Military service is compulsory. There is a 30,000-man National Guard and a 6,500-man Frontier Force and Coastguard. Defence expenditure for 1981/82 is estimated at 92,500 million Saudi riyals.

Economic Affairs

Saudi Arabia was the largest producer of crude petroleum in the Middle East and the third largest in the world in 1980. It also possesses at least a quarter of the world's oil reserves. Average daily production of crude oil was 8.5 million b.p.d. in 1976 and 9.2 million b.p.d. in 1977. Average production for 1978 was 8.3 million b.p.d., but during 1979 Saudi Arabia raised its production to 9.5 million b.p.d. from its previously declared ceiling of 8.5 million b.p.d. Towards the end of 1980 production was raised to more than 10 million b.p.d. to compensate oil users for the shortfall due to the Gulf war. During most of 1981 average production was over 10 million b.p.d., but in November, after the OPEC conference, Saudi Arabia reduced production to 8.5 million b.p.d.

The huge oil revenues encouraged Saudi Arabia to embark on a Five-Year Plan whose total expenditure in the period 1975–80 was planned at 498,000 million riyals. Port congestion and manpower shortages caused some initial delay, but port congestion eased after 1977, and the aim of the SR 780,000 million third Five-Year Plan (1980–85) is to diversify industry.

Saudi Arabia has been acquiring increasing control of its oil industry. In June 1974 an interim agreement was reached whereby the Saudi Government acquired a 60 per cent interest in the Arabian-American Oil Co. (Aramco), holder of the main oil concessions in the country. Agreement on a 100 per cent takeover of Aramco was concluded in September 1980. A petrochemicals and steel complex and harbour is being built at Jubail, and numerous other projects have been started.

Apart from oil, the chief activity is agriculture. The principal products are dates, wheat, barley, fruit, hides and wool. Camels, horses, donkeys and sheep are raised. Another source of revenue is the income from religious pilgrims, who come from all parts of the Muslim world to the holy cities of Mecca and Medina.

Transport and Communications

There is a railway from Dammam on the Persian Gulf to Riyadh via Dhahran, Hufuf and al-Kharj. Paved roads were extended under the 1975–80 Plan. Saudia (Saudi Arabian Airlines) operates internal and external air services. The principal ports are Jeddah, on the Red Sea, and Ras Tanura and Dammam, on the Gulf.

Social Welfare

Oil revenues have enabled the Saudi Arabian Government to provide free medicine and medical care for all citizens and foreign residents. In 1980 the country had 67 hospitals, with five others nearing completion. The King Faisal Medical City, on the outskirts of Riyadh, is claimed to be the most technically advanced unit in the world.

Education

Elementary, secondary and higher education is free but not compulsory. Under the 1975-80 five-year plan the number of Saudi children attending schools was expected to rise from 760,000 in 1975 to 1,300,000 in 1980. Enrolment at universities was estimated at 43,000 in 1979/80.

Tourism

All devout Muslims try to pay at least one visit to the holy cities of Medina, the burial place of Muhammad, and Mecca, his birthplace. More than 812,000 pilgrims visited Saudi Arabia in the Muslim year 1400 (1980-81).

Public Holidays

Government offices work a five-day week, Thursday and Friday being the two rest-days.

1982: July 23rd and subsequent six to eight days (Id ul Fitr, end of Ramadan), September 29th and subsequent five days (Id ul Adha, Feast of the Sacrifice), October 19th (Muslim New Year), December 28th (Mou-loud, Birth of the Prophet).

SAUDI ARABIA-IRAQ NEUTRAL ZONE

The Najdi (Saudi Arabian) frontier with Iraq was defined in the Treaty of Mohammara in May 1922. Later a Neutral Zone of 7,044 sq. km. was established adjacent to the western tip of the Kuwait frontier. No military or permanent buildings were to be erected in the zone and the nomads of both countries were to have unimpeded access to its pastures and wells. A further agreement concerning the administration of this zone was signed between Iraq and Saudi Arabia in May 1938. In July 1975 Iraq and Saudi Arabia signed an agreement providing for an equal division of the diamond-shaped zone between the two countries, with the border following a straight line through the zone.

SAUDI ARABIA-KUWAIT PARTITIONED ZONE

A Convention signed at Uqair in December 1922 fixed the Najdi (Saudi Arabian) boundary with Kuwait. The Convention also established a Neutral Zone of 5,770 sq. km. immediately to the south of Kuwait in which Saudi Arabia and Kuwait held equal rights. The final agreement on this matter was signed in 1963. Since 1966 the Zone has been divided between the two countries and each administers its own half, in practice as an integral part of the state. However, the oil wealth of the whole Zone remains undivided and production from the on-shore oil concessions in the Partitioned Zone is shared equally between the two states' concessionaires (Aminoil and Getty).

Note: Prior to January 1960 the prevailing exchange rate was U.S. $1=3.75 Saudi riyals (1 riyal=26.67 U.S. cents). From January 1960 to August 1971 the exchange rate was $1=4.50 riyals (1 riyal=22.22 U.S. cents). Between December 1971 and February 1973 the rate was $1=4.145 riyals (1 riyal=24.13 U.S. cents). It was $1=3.730 riyals (1 riyal=26.18 U.S. cents) from February to August 1973; and $1=3.55 riyals (1 riyal=28.17 U.S. cents) from August 1973 to March 1975, when the riyal's direct link with the dollar was ended and the currency was valued in terms of the IMF Special Drawing Right (based on a weighted "basket" of currencies since July 1974), with a mid-point of 1 SDR=4.28255 riyals. Wide fluctuations around this are allowed in order to permit a fixed rate against the U.S. dollar for extended periods of time. From August 1975 to July 1977 the rate was $1=3.53 riyals. The average exchange rate (riyals per U.S. dollar) was: 3.518 in 1975; 3.525 in 1977. Since July 1978 there have been frequent small adjustments in the riyal-dollar rate. The average rate (riyals per dollar) was: 3.400 in 1978; 3.361 in 1979; 3.327 in 1980. In terms of sterling, the exchange rate between November 1967 and June 1972 was £1=10.80 riyals.

THE CONSTITUTION

After Ibn Saud had finally brought the whole of present-day Saudi Arabia under his control in 1925, the territory was made into a dual kingdom.

Six years later, in 1932, the realm was unified by decree and became the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia. Saudi Arabia as a whole has in practice been developing, in recent years particularly, from monarchical towards ministerial rule. The power of the Cabinet was increased in May 1958, when several ministries were delegated to the Crown Prince. In December 1960, however, the Crown Prince resigned and King Saud assumed the Prime Ministership. In 1962, Prince Faisal resumed the Prime Ministership. In 1964 King Saud was relieved of his duties and his brother Prince Faisal was proclaimed King. King Faisal was assassinated in 1975 and succeeded by his brother Khalid.

An eight-man committee under the Chairmanship of Prince Nayef, Minister of the Interior, was formed in March 1980 to draw up a 200-article basic "system of rule", based entirely on Islamic principles. Plans were also being made for the establishment of a Consultative Council, whose 50-70 members would be nominated.

The organs of local government are the General Municipal Councils, the District Council and the tribal and village councils. A General Municipal Council is established in the towns of Mecca, Medina and Jeddah. Its members are proposed by the inhabitants and must be approved by the King. Functioning concurrently with each General Municipal Council is a General Administration Committee, which investigates ways and means of executing resolutions passed by the Council. There are also elected district councils under the presidency of local chiefs, consisting of his assistant, the principal local officials and other important persons of the district. Every village and tribe has a council composed of the sheikh, who presides, his legal advisers and two other prominent personages. These councils have power to enforce regulations.

The principal administrative divisions are as follows:

Najd: capital Riyadh. Najd is sub-divided as follows:

1. The principality of Riyadh, to which are associated Wadi al-Dawasir, al-Afaj, al-Hariq, al-Kharj, al-'Aridh, al-Washm and Sudair.
2. The principality of al-Qasim, comprising 'Unaizah, Buraidah, al-Ras and their villages, and al-Mudhanban and its dependencies.
3. The Northern principality (capital Hayil). This includes the tribes of Shammar, 'Anzah, al-Dhafir and Mutair, the Town of Taima in the south and some northerly towns.

Hijaz: capital Mecca. Includes the principalities of Tabouk, al-'Ula, Dhaba, al-Wajh, Amlaj, Yanbu', Medina, Jeddah, al-Lith, al-Qunfundhah, Baljarshi and Ta'if.

Asir: capital Abha. Includes Abha, Qahtan, Shahrn, Rijal Alma', Rijal al-Hajr, Banu Shahr, Mahayil, Bariq, Bisha, Najran and its villages.

Eastern Province (Al Hasa): capital Dammam. Includes Hufuf, Al-Mobarraz, Qatif, Dhahran, Al-Khobar and Qaryat al-Jubail.

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

Judges are independent and governed by the rules of Islamic Sharia. The following courts operate:

Supreme Council of Justice: consists of eleven members and supervises work of the courts; reviews legal questions referred to it by the Minister of Justice and expresses opinions on judicial questions; reviews sentences of death, cutting and stoning.

Court of Cassation: consists of Chief Justice and an adequate number of judges; includes department for penal suits, department for personal status and department for other suits.

General (Public) Courts: consist of one or more Judges; sentences of public courts are issued by a single judge, with the exception of death, stoning and cutting, which require the decision of three judges.

Summary Courts: consist of a single judge or more; sentences are issued by a single judge.

Specialized Courts: Article 26 of the judicial system stipulates that the setting up of specialized courts is permissible by Royal Decree on a proposal from the Supreme Council of Justice.

RELIGION

Arabia is the centre of the Islamic faith and includes the holy cities of Mecca and Medina. Except in the Eastern Province, where a large number of people follow Shi'a rites, the majority of the population are of the Sunni faith. The last seventy years have seen the rise of the Wahhabi sect, who originated in the eighteenth century, but first became unified and influential under their late leader King Ibn Saud. They are now the keepers of the holy places and control the pilgrimage to Mecca.

Mecca: Birthplace of the Prophet Muhammad, seat of the Great Mosque and Shrine of Ka'ba visited by a million Muslims annually.

Medina: Burial place of Muhammad, second sacred city of Islam.

THE PRESS

Since 1964 most newspapers and periodicals have been published by press organizations administered by boards of directors with full autonomous powers, in accordance with the provisions of the Press Law. These organizations, which took over from small private firms, are privately owned by groups of individuals widely experienced in newspaper publishing and administration (see Publishers).

There are also a number of popular periodicals published by the Government and by the Arabian American Oil Co. and distributed free of charge. The press is subject to no legal restriction affecting freedom of expression or the coverage of news.

FINANCE

BANKING

The Saudi Arabian banking system consists of: the Saudi Arabian Monetary Agency, as central note-issuing and regulatory body; twelve commercial banks (two national and ten foreign banks); and three specialist banks. There is a policy of 'Saudization' of the foreign banks.

The rising volume of oil revenues imposed a need for a central monetary authority and in 1952 the Saudi Arabian Monetary Agency (SAMA) was established in Jeddah. SAMA's functions include: bankers to the Government; stabilization of the value of the currency; administration of monetary reserves; issue of coin and notes; and regulation of banking.

TRANSPORT

RAILWAYS

Saudi Government Railroad Organization: P.O.B. 92, Dhahran; Pres. FAYSAL M. AL-SHEHAIL.

The Saudi Government Railroad is a single track, standard gauge line 577 km. long. In addition, the total length of spur lines and sidings is 170 km. The main line connects Dammam Port at the Arabian Gulf with Riyadh, and passes Dhahran, Abqaiq, Hufuf, Harad and al-Kharj. Plans to construct lines linking Dammam with Jubail, providing a direct link from Hufuf to Riyadh, and to restore the Hijaz railway from Medina to Damascus, were under study in 1980.

The Organization is an independent entity with a Board of Directors headed by the Minister of Communications.

ROADS

Asphalted roads link Jeddah to Mecca, Jeddah to Medina, Medina to Yanbu, Ta'if to Mecca, Riyadh to al-Kharj, and Dammam to Hufuf as well as the principal communities and certain outlying points in Aramco's area of operations. Work is proceeding on various other roads, including one which will link Medina and Riyadh. A road from Ta'if to Jizan in the south, near the Yemeni border, was officially opened in 1976. The trans-Arabian highway, linking Dammam, Riyadh, Ta'if, Mecca and Jeddah, was completed in 1967. Under the 1975-80 Plan some 9,400 km. of asphalted roads were added to the existing network. In 1980 there were 20,869 km. of tarmac roads and 22,306 km. of dirt roads. Metalled roads link all the main population centres.

National Transport Company of Saudi Arabia: P.O.B. 7280, Jeddah; specializes in inward clearance, freight forwarding, general and heavy road haulage, re-export, charter air freight and exhibitions; Man. Dir. A. D. BLACKSTOCK.

SHIPPING

Saudi Arabian Ports Authority: P.O.B. 5162, Riyadh; Pres. and Chair. Dr. FAYEZ BADR; Dir. Gen. MUHAMMAD A. BAKR.

The ports of Jeddah, Dammam, Yanbu, Jizan and Jubail, as well as a number of minor ports, are under the exclusive management of the Ports Authority.

Jeddah is the principal port and the main point of entry for pilgrims bound for Mecca. It had 43 berths by March 1981 and more are under construction. These berths have draughts ranging from 8 to 14 metres.

Dammam is the second largest port and had 39 berths by 1981. Draughts at this port range from 9 to 14 metres.

Yanbu is a busy cargo port as well as being the main port used by pilgrims bound for Medina. It has recently been extended and modernized with new docks, storage space and a special Pilgrims' Hall. The port has two berths with an additional seven under construction. The draughts range from 10 to 12 metres.

Jizan, which is the main port for the southern part of the country, comprises three berths with a draught of 10 metres and a further 10 berths with draughts of between 8 and 12 metres are under construction.

At Jubail there is a new deep-water port which includes 25 berths with draughts ranging from 12 to 14 metres, plus an Open Sea Tanker Terminal with four 28-metre draught berths.

In addition to the ports mentioned, there are a number of minor ports including Haql, Wejeh, Umludj, Rabigh, Al Lith, Qunsudah, Farasan, Qudayma and Muwaih on the Red Sea coast and Al-Khobar, Qatif, Uqair, Ras Al-Ghar and Darin on the Arabian Gulf coast. Most of these are suitable only for small craft. Ras Mishab on the Arabian Gulf coast is operated by the Ministry of Defence and Aviation.

SENEGAL

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of Senegal lies on the west coast of Africa, bordered to the north by Mauritania, to the east by Mali and to the south by Guinea and Guinea-Bissau. In the southern part of the country The Gambia forms a narrow enclave extending some 320 km. (200 miles) inland. The climate is tropical, with a long dry season followed by a short wet season. Average annual temperature is about 29°C (84°F). French is the official language but the three main language groups, with their principal languages, are: Senegalo-Guinean (Wolof, Serer and Diola), Mandé (Bambara and Sarakolé) and Poulh (Toucouleur and Peul). About 86 per cent of the population are Muslim and about 5 per cent Christian, mostly Roman Catholic. The remainder follow traditional beliefs. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) has three vertical stripes of green, gold and red, the gold stripe bearing a five-pointed green star. The capital is Dakar.

Recent History

In November 1958, after 300 years as a French colony, Senegal became a self-governing member of the French Community. The formation in April 1959 of a Mali Federation, linking Senegal with the former French Sudan, was not successful, and the entity had only two months of independence before being dissolved in August 1960. An independent Republic of Senegal was then proclaimed, and Léopold Sédar Senghor was elected President in September. Relations with France remain close, and France maintains military bases in Senegal.

In 1962 President Senghor removed the Prime Minister, Mamadou Dia, from office and took over the post himself. After a decisive win for his party, the Union progressiste sénégalaise (UPS), in the National Assembly elections of 1963, President Senghor gradually absorbed or outlawed other political parties to create a one-party state by 1966. However, Senghor recreated the office of Prime Minister in 1970 and appointed to it a young man, Abdou Diouf, who in 1976 was made Senghor's constitutional successor. In 1973 Senghor, the sole candidate, was re-elected as President.

President Senghor fulfilled his promise of a gradual return to multi-party democracy by freeing all political prisoners in 1974 and by amending the Constitution in 1976 to allow three parties to contest elections. In December 1976, after the UPS had won 85 seats in the National Assembly elections, the UPS was disbanded, and re-formed as the Parti socialiste (PS), which became the democratic socialist party provided for in the Constitution. The Parti démocratique sénégalais (PDS) was recognized as the liberal democratic party. The Parti africain de l'indépendance (PAI) was accepted as the Marxist-Leninist faction, but the more widely-based Rassemblement national démocratique (RND) was refused recognition. In December 1978 the National Assembly agreed to amend the Constitution again to allow the Mouvement républicain sénégalais (MRS) recognition as a right-wing party. There was support within the PS and from the marabouts (the leaders of the Islamic sects who represent 80 per cent of the total population and whose influence increased after the Iranian revolution) for a more flexible political system.

Elections were held in February 1978. The PS won 83 of the 100 seats in the National Assembly, the remainder being won by the PDS. In the concurrent presidential election, Senghor overwhelmingly defeated the leader of the PDS, Abdoulaye Wade. About 37 per cent of the electorate abstained, reflecting a call by Anta Diop, the leader of the RND, to boycott the elections. A new Government was formed in March. Diouf carried out a reshuffle in September, dismissing his rival, Babacar Ba.

In May 1978 Senegal strengthened its links with Guinea and the Ivory Coast, although in August 1979 relations with Guinea were threatened when a number of Guinean exiles in Dakar secretly plotted the overthrow of Guinea's President, Sekou Touré. However, the ringleaders were arrested, and in October President Senghor signed ten co-operation agreements with the Guinean President.

In November 1980 Senegal sent troops into The Gambia under a mutual assistance accord, to protect the Government from an alleged threat of invasion by Libyan forces, but withdrew them shortly afterwards. President Senghor retired in December 1980. The former Prime Minister, Abdou Diouf, succeeded him as Head of State and re-organized the Council of Ministers. He also declared an amnesty for political offenders, and amended the Constitution to allow the existence of more than four political parties. By July 1981 an additional seven parties had been legalized. A further ministerial reshuffle took place in August, and included the removal of former President Senghor's nephew from the Government.

Following an attempted coup against the Gambian Government in July 1981, Senegalese troops again intervened in The Gambia, and protracted talks between President Diouf and President Jawara resulted in an announcement that Senegal and The Gambia planned to merge. The confederation of Senegambia thus came into being on February 1st, 1982.

Government

Legislative power rests with the unicameral National Assembly, with 100 members (to be increased to 120) elected for five years by universal adult suffrage. Executive power is held by the President, also directly elected for five years at the same time as the Assembly. He appoints and leads a Cabinet, including a Prime Minister. Senegal comprises eight regions, each with an appointed Governor, an elected local assembly and a separate budget.

Defence

In July 1981 Senegal had an army of 8,500 men, a navy of 760 and an air force of 300. There were 2,300 men in paramilitary forces. There are plans to increase the army to 15,000. Integration with the forces of The Gambia is envisaged. Military service is selective and lasts for two years. France provides technical and material aid. Defence expenditure in 1980 was U.S. $70.7 million.

Economic Affairs

About 70 per cent of the population is engaged in agriculture and stock rearing. Agriculture provides almost half of Senegal's exports and is responsible for one-third of G.D.P. The economy is dominated by the production and processing of groundnuts. Groundnuts and groundnut oil together normally provide about a third of export earnings. Attempts to diversify the range of crops grown and become self-sufficient in foodstuffs include the development of rice and tomato cultivation, with the aid of EEC funds, and investment in livestock. Large imports of rice and wheat were needed to meet food deficits in the late 1970s. The 1980 groundnut crop failed, as a result of drought and poor-quality seed. Late rainfalls also resulted in the loss of 164,000 cattle and have accelerated the economic decline. There was little sign of improvement in 1981. Development of the Senegal River basin, through the construction of two dams, aims to control seasonal flooding and irrigate 400,000 hectares of land in the north. However, problems over external financing delayed the scheme, which finally began in late 1981. The fishing industry is being expanded. An industrial fisheries complex with an annual capacity of 36,000 metric tons, is being constructed in Casamance, and was expected to begin production in 1982.

Senegal exploits deposits of lime phosphate and aluminium phosphate, both near Thiès, and the Government has a 50 per cent share in each of the two operations. Two factories for the production of sulphuric and phosphoric acids are to be built by Senegal Chemical Industries at Thaiba. Before export the phosphates are concentrated to provide the basis for fertilizers. In recent years the mining sector has, to some extent, compensated for the failure of agricultural exports. There are plans to exploit the extensive deposits of iron ore at Falémé, using power provided by two dams on the Rivers Senegal and Gambia, and exporting it by a new rail link to the coast, while prospecting in the north for further phosphate deposits and in the east for uranium continues. Deposits of petroleum have been discovered off the coast, with reserves indicated at about 300 million metric tons. A national oil company, Petrosen, was set up in 1981. Natural gas was discovered offshore in 1977.

Industry is becoming increasingly developed and includes textiles, chemicals, building materials and various light industries, including food processing. The 1981-85 Plan envisages the development of heavy industries such as steel, engineering and transport equipment. In 1980 industrial production accounted for about 33 per cent of G.D.P. Output fell by 17 per cent (compared with an increase of 12 per cent in 1979), largely as a result of the poor groundnut harvest.

With the aim of attracting foreign companies and providing employment, an Industrial Free Zone was established near Dakar but with limited success. Foreign firms operating there are free of taxes, duties and bureaucratic controls. A new bonus system was introduced in 1981, in an attempt to stimulate investment. A lack of skilled labour is, however, proving to be a major problem. In the rest of Senegal, on the other hand, a policy of "Senegalization" is increasing state control and native management of affairs.

Senegal remains heavily dependent on foreign aid and investment. In 1980 the persistent trade deficit reached a record 109,000 million francs CFA, and the total foreign debt rose to 208,000 million francs CFA. The balance of payments deficit was reduced as a result of increased external aid, particularly from France, which supplied a total of 51,500 million francs CFA.

The Sixth Development Plan (1981-85) envisages that the annual growth rate in G.D.P. will not exceed 4 per cent (compared with 3 per cent in 1980). A total of 463,847 million francs CFA is to be invested. Agricultural production, which declined by 18 per cent during the Fifth Plan, is to be diversified in an effort to reduce the food shortfall. Private investment in industry is being encouraged, particularly for small and medium-sized businesses, and the tourist industry is being developed. In an attempt to reduce the petroleum import bill, alternative sources of energy (such as peat, lignite and uranium) are to be exploited.

Transport and Communications

The main railway line runs east from Dakar into Mali and another line runs north to St. Louis along the coast, with a branch to Linguera, totalling 1,145 km. The road network is good, with a total of 13,895 km. in 1980, of which over 7,000 km. were passable at all seasons. A total of 462 km of new roads is to be built, financed by the UN Development Programme and foreign aid. The Senegal River is used to transport goods by both Senegal and Mauritania. Dakar is the largest port in West Africa and serves both Senegal and Mauritania. There is an international airport at Dakar and numerous small airports.

Social Welfare

Social services include a state medical service and certain family and maternity benefits for workers. In 1977 Senegal had 11 government hospitals, with 5,836 beds, and 334 physicians, one per 15,560 of the population.

Education

Education is compulsory for all children between six and fourteen years old, although facilities exist for only 40 per cent of this age group to attend school. Since 1971 education has been re-orientated towards practical subjects. Secondary school pupils have been encouraged to follow science-based courses and school-leavers directed to take up professional training in fields where personnel are needed. In line with the policy of "negritude", the university specializes in local studies, and almost half its teachers are Africans.

Tourism

There is a wild game reserve in the Nikolo-Koba National Park, a total of five National Parks, a bird sanctuary at Djoudi, and there are fine beaches. The island of Goré, near Dakar, is of great historical interest. Tourists provide a valuable source of foreign currency and encourage traditional crafts. Revenue from tourism totalled 10,000 million francs CFA in 1980. Under the 1981-85 Plan, hotel accommodation is being further increased, including the development of the resort of Sali Portudal. Senegal is a member of the Office Inter-Etats du Tourisme Africaine.

Public Holidays

1982: May 1st (Labour Day), May 20th (Ascension Day), June 6th (Whit Sunday), July 14th (Day of Association), July 23rd (Korité, end of Ramadan), August 15th (Assumption), September 29th (Tabaski, Feast of Sacrifice), November 1st (All Saints' Day), December 25th (Christmas), December 28th (Mouloud, Birth of the Prophet).

THE CONSTITUTION*(Promulgated March 7th, 1963, subsequently amended)*

Preamble: Affirms the Rights of Man, liberty of the person and religious freedom. National sovereignty belongs to the people who exercise it through their representatives or by means of referenda. There is universal, equal and secret suffrage. French is the official language.

The President: The President of the Republic is elected by direct universal suffrage for a five-year term and is eligible for re-election. He holds executive power and conducts national policy with the assistance of ministers chosen and nominated by himself. He is Commander of the Armed Forces and responsible for national defence. He may, after consultation with the President of the National Assembly and with the Supreme Court, submit any draft law to referendum. In circumstances where the security of the State is in grave and immediate danger, he can assume emergency powers and rule by decree. The President of the Republic can be impeached only on a charge of high treason or by a secret ballot of the National Assembly carrying a three-fifths majority.

The Prime Minister: The Prime Minister is nominated or dismissed by the President, but is responsible to the National Assembly. Should the Presidency fall vacant, the Prime Minister will assume the office for the duration of the term.

The National Assembly: Legislative power is vested in the National Assembly which is elected by universal direct suffrage for a five-year term at the same time as the Presidential election. The Assembly discusses and votes legislation and submits it to the President of the Republic for promulgation. The President can direct the Assembly to give a second reading to the bill, in which case it may be made law only by a three-fifths majority. The President of the Republic can also call upon the Supreme Court to declare whether any draft law is constitutional and acceptable. Legislation may be initiated by either the President of the Republic or the National Assembly.

Amendments: The President of the Republic and Deputies to the National Assembly may propose amendments to the Constitution. Draft amendments are adopted by a three-fifths majority vote of the National Assembly. Failing this they are submitted to referendum.

Judicial Power: The President appoints the members of the Supreme Court of Justice, on the advice of the Superior Court of Magistrates, which determines the constitutionality of laws. A High Court of Justice, appointed by the National Assembly from among its members, is competent to impeach the President or members of the Government.

Local Government: Senegal is divided into eight regions, each having a Governor and an elected Local Assembly.

Political Parties: There is no limit to the number of political parties.

SEYCHELLES

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of Seychelles comprises over 100 islands widely scattered over the western Indian Ocean. Apart from the Seychelles archipelago, the country contains several other island groups, the southernmost being about 209 km. (130 miles) north of Madagascar. The climate is tropical, with small seasonal variations in temperature and rainfall. Average temperature in Victoria is nearly 27°C (80°F) and average annual rainfall 236 cm. (93 in.). In 1981 Creole, spoken by virtually all Seychellois, was made the official language, replacing English and French. Almost all the inhabitants are Christian, 90 per cent belonging to the Roman Catholic Church. The national flag (proportions 2 by 1) has three horizontal stripes: a broad green band separated from a narrower red band by an undulating white band. The capital is Victoria (formerly Port Victoria) on the island of Mahé.

Recent History

Seychelles was uninhabited until annexed by France in the eighteenth century. It was ceded to the United Kingdom in 1814 and administered as a dependency of Mauritius until 1903, when it became a Crown Colony.

Several political parties were formed in the 1960s, of which the most important were the Seychelles Democratic Party (SDP), led by James Mancham, and the Seychelles People's United Party (SPUP), led by Albert René. In response to their demands, a new constitution was promulgated in 1967, establishing a Governing Council with a majority of elected members. This, however, received the backing of neither party and, following a constitutional conference in London in 1970, a ministerial system of government was introduced. In the general election of November 1970, the SDP won 10 seats in the Legislative Council to the five of the SPUP, and Mancham was appointed Chief Minister.

The SPUP, supported by the Organization of African Unity (OAU), demanded immediate independence for Seychelles, while Mancham favoured integration of the colony within the United Kingdom. In the election campaign of 1974, however, the parties were united on the independence issue. The results caused bitter controversy. The SDP, which polled 52 per cent of the votes, was allocated 13 seats in the Legislative Council, while the SPUP, with 48 per cent of the votes, received only two. At another constitutional conference in London, in March 1975, it was agreed that Seychelles should have internal self-government from October and the two parties formed a coalition under Prime Minister Mancham. An independence constitution was agreed in January 1976 and Seychelles became a sovereign republic within the Commonwealth on June 29th, under a coalition government with Mancham as President and René as Prime Minister. Under the independence agreement, the United Kingdom returned to Seychelles the islands of Aldabra, Farquhar and Desroches, detached in 1965 to form part of the British Indian Ocean Territory and subsequently leased to the U.S.A.

On June 4-5th, 1977, supporters of the SPUP, led by René, staged an armed coup while Mancham was in London for the Commonwealth Conference. René was sworn in as second President of the Republic and it was announced that Mancham would not be allowed to return. The National Assembly was dissolved and the constitution suspended, but reintroduced with major modifications in July. President René assumed power to rule by decree. In May 1978 the SPUP was renamed the Seychelles People's Progressive Front (SPPF). A new constitution, proclaimed in March 1979, established a one-party state. In June elections for a new National Assembly were held, contested only by members of the SPPF. President René was the sole candidate in the concurrent presidential election.

There have been three attempts to overthrow President René's socialist Government using foreign-backed mercenaries. Tanzania has provided defence support since the second of these coup attempts in November 1979. The most serious assault took place in November 1981, when 44 mercenaries, mainly South Africans, flew to join rebels already on the islands. When the plot backfired, most of the mercenaries escaped by hijacking an Air India plane back to South Africa. A further 400 Tanzanian troops were airlifted in to restore stability.

Government

Under the 1979 constitution, Seychelles is a one-party state. Executive power is vested in the President, who is Head of State and Head of Government. The President is elected for a five-year term by direct popular vote. The President appoints and leads the Council of Ministers and also appoints the holders of certain public offices and the judiciary. The legislature is the unicameral National Assembly, with 25 members: 23 directly elected for five years and two appointed by the President.

Defence

A Seychelles People's Liberation Army, with about 250 members in 1981, and a volunteer People's Militia, with about 3,000 members in 1981, open to those aged between 16 and 60 years, were formed in 1977. Tanzania provides military advisers and additional personnel. The police force numbers about 450.

Economic Affairs

The economy, traditionally based on subsistence agriculture, has since 1971 become increasingly dependent on tourism and the growth of related infrastructure and services. In 1975 tourism overtook agriculture as the major contributor to G.D.P.; tourism generally accounts for about 20 per cent and agriculture for about 10 per cent of G.D.P. About half the land area is cultivable although tree crops, such as copra, limit the arable land area. In 1980 food imports constituted 20 per cent of total imports. The most important cash crop is copra, which accounted for 52 per cent of domestic export earnings in 1981. How ever, production of copra and of the second cash crop, cinnamon bark, has fallen since 1973. Small quantities of tea, sweet potatoes, cassava, yams, sugar cane and bananas are grown for local consumption, although the staple food, rice, is imported in bulk. In an attempt to diversify the economy away from tourism, the fishing industry is being modernized: a National Fishing Company, operating four tuna boats and a cold store for 1,000 metric tons of fish, was established in 1980. In December 1978 the Government unilaterally declared an economic zone extending for 200 nautical miles (370 km.) around the islands to protect Seychelles' waters from foreign fishing vessels. The total annual catch was about 3,800 metric tons in 1980/81 but is expected to rise to 14,000 tons when development is completed.

There are no mineral resources except guano. In 1977 the Government signed a petroleum exploration agreement, covering an offshore concession area of 18,000 sq. km., with an oil consortium, which undertook seismic surveys during 1978 and 1979. Test drilling began in March 1980. The manufacturing sector, which includes boat-building, printing and furniture-making, is inhibited by the lack of natural resources and is largely organized on a family basis. The economy grew rapidly, mainly because of the expansion of tourism, after the opening of the international airport in 1971. The number of visitors reached a peak of 78,900 in 1979, from only 1,622 in 1970, but had fallen to about 63,000 by 1981 because of world recession, an increase in air fares and the suspension of landings by South African Airways.

Between 1970 and 1974 G.D.P. increased in real terms by about 16 per cent annually, and by about 8 per cent between 1975 and 1977. It grew by 12 per cent in 1978 and 1979. The ability to sustain this high level of economic activity, and to offset a growing visible trade deficit depends in part on the country's continuing access to foreign capital, both aid and private investment. Total planned recurrent expenditure in the 1981 budget was 38.4 million rupees, of which education accounted for 19 per cent, health for 9 per cent and transport and tourism for 7 per cent. In June 1978 the Government announced a five-year development plan, subject to annual revision: in 1981 total investment for 1981-85 was set at 2,680 million rupees. The Seychelles Development Bank was formed in 1978, with French technical support, and the Seychelles National Investment Corporation was set up in June 1979 as a holding company covering important sectors of the economy.

Transport and Communications

Most investment in transport has been put into the islands of Mahé, Praslin and La Digue, which contain 98 per cent of the population. These islands have 278 km. of roads, mostly surfaced. There are no railways. Mahé is well served by a number of international airlines. Inter-island transport is mostly by sea but small aircraft also provide a regular service. International shipping services have declined since the airport was opened in 1971, although the port of Victoria can handle 150,000 tons of goods annually. An extensive telecommunications network has grown up to serve the tourist industry.

Social Welfare

In 1977 there were four hospitals and one mental hospital. In 1980 there were 17 clinics, and a new 250-bed general hospital was under construction; there were 20 doctors, five dentists and 100 other medical staff. Health services are free for all residents. The Poor Relief Ordinance provides for children and mothers in need, and the Workmen's Compensation Ordinance provides insurance against injury or death. In 1979 an old-age pensions scheme was introduced. Unemployment benefit is provided in exchange for manual work.

Education

In 1980 there were 14,529 children in 24 primary schools and 484 in secondary schools. In 1980 the Government launched a programme of educational reform based on the British comprehensive system. A voluntary National Youth Service, launched in February 1981, now caters for the secondary education of most children between the ages of 15 and 17. Nine years of compulsory free education are received in primary schools. There is a Technical College and Teacher Training College. A number of students study abroad, principally in the United Kingdom. In 1971 adult illiteracy averaged 42.2 per cent (males 44.3 per cent, females 40.2 per cent).

Tourism

Seychelles is renowned for its excellent climate, beaches, and scenery. There are more than 500 varieties of flora and many rare species of birds. The Government is determined that development of the tourist industry shall not contribute to the destruction of the environment and strict laws govern the building of hotels. There were 2,570 hotel beds in 1980. Most of the industry is concentrated on the islands of Mahé, Praslin and La Digue, although there are plans to develop tourism in some of the other islands. There are national parks at Morne Seychellois and Valley de Mai.

Public Holidays

1982: May 1st (Labour Day), June 5th (National Day), June 10th (Corpus Christi), August 15th (Assumption), November 1st (All Saints' Day), December 8th (Immaculate Conception), December 25th (Christmas Day).

1983: January 1st-2nd (New Year), April 1st-4th (Easter).

100 Seychelles rupees=£8.39=$16.14.

Note: Until November 1979 the Seychelles rupee was tied to the pound sterling and had a value of 7½ new pence (£1=13.333 rupees). The exchange rate was 1 rupee=18 U.S. cents (U.S. $1=5.556 rupees) from November 1967 to August 1971; and 1 rupee=19.543 U.S. cents ($1=5.117 rupees) from December 1971 to June 1972, after which the rupee "floated" in line with sterling. In November 1979 the link with sterling was ended and the rupee was tied to the IMF Special Drawing Right at a mid-point of 1 SDR=8.3197 rupees. In March 1981 the rupee was revalued by 15 per cent, the new rate being set at 1 SDR=7.2345 rupees. The average exchange rates (rupees per U.S. dollar) were: 5.33 in 1972; 5.44 in 1973; 5.70 in 1974; 6.03 in 1975; 7.42 in 1976; 7.64 in 1977; 6.95 in 1978; 6.33 in 1979; 6.39 in 1980.

THE CONSTITUTION

The independence constitution, which came into effect on June 29th, 1976, was suspended after the coup in June 1977 but reintroduced in July 1977 with important modifications. Provisions relating to the Prime Minister, the National Assembly and the Public Services Commission were removed. The President was empowered to rule by decree. During 1978 a constitutional council presented proposals for a new constitution, providing for the protection of fundamental human rights, a Cabinet, a People's Assembly and an independent judiciary. The new constitution was proclaimed on March 26th, 1979. Elections were held on June 23rd-26th in which President René, as head of the Seychelles People's Progressive Front (SPPF), was sole candidate for the presidency.

Under the provisions of the constitution, the President is elected by popular vote simultaneously with elections for the National Assembly. The President fulfils the functions of Head of State and Commander-in-Chief of the armed forces and may hold office for a maximum period of three consecutive five-year terms. All candidates standing for the National Assembly are required to be members of the SPPF, the sole permitted political organization, and elections are on a constituency basis. The Assembly consists of 23 elected members and two presidential appointees who represent the Inner and Outlying Islands. The Council of Ministers is appointed by the President and acts in an advisory capacity to him.

SIERRA LEONE

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of Sierra Leone lies on the west coast of Africa, with Guinea to the north and east and Liberia to the south. The climate is hot and humid, with an average temperature of 27°C (80°F); the rainy season lasts from May to October. English is the official language and Krio, Mende, Limba and Temne are widely spoken. The vast majority of the population follow animist beliefs and there are Muslim and Christian minorities. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) has equal horizontal stripes of green, white and blue. The capital is Freetown.

Recent History

Sierra Leone was formerly a British colony and protectorate. A new constitution, providing for universal adult suffrage, was introduced in 1951. Elections were won by the Sierra Leone People's Party (SLPP), led by Dr. (later Sir) Milton Margai, who became Chief Minister in 1953 and Prime Minister in 1958. Sierra Leone achieved independence, as a constitutional monarchy within the Commonwealth, on April 27th, 1961. The SLPP retained power at elections in May 1962. Sir Milton Margai died in April 1964 and was succeeded as Prime Minister by his half-brother, Dr. (later Sir) Albert Margai, previously Minister of Finance.

Following disputed elections in March 1967, the army assumed control of the country and set up a National Reformation Council. The Governor-General was forced to leave the country. A second army revolt in April 1968 led to the restoration of civilian government and the return to power of the Prime Minister elected in 1967, Dr. Siaka Stevens, leader of the All-People's Congress (APC). In April 1971 a republican constitution was introduced and Dr. Siaka Stevens became executive President.

The 1972 by-elections were not contested by the Opposition SLPP, and SLPP candidates withdrew from the general elections held in May 1973 after the nominations of 12 of their candidates were declared null and void. This left no official opposition in the House of Representatives. In 1976 President Stevens was unanimously re-elected for a second five-year term of office. A state of emergency was declared in February 1977, following student riots, and elections were promised for May. These resulted in victory for the APC but were accompanied by violence and allegations of corruption and intimidation. The APC was encouraged by its large majority to renew its demands for a one-party state, and in July the Speaker ruled that the SLPP was not capable of undertaking the government of the country, and was thus not the official opposition party. A new constitution, providing for a one-party system, was promulgated in May 1978, approved in a national referendum and adopted by the House of Representatives in June. The APC thus became the only legal party. President Stevens was sworn in for a seven-year term and he subsequently released political detainees and gave Government posts to several former SLPP members.

The Government faced mounting opposition in 1981 over the "Vouchergate" scandal, which involved government officials and several Cabinet ministers in the misappropriation of public funds, and in August a state of emergency was declared to curb a general strike against rising prices and food shortages. President Stevens announced that he would retire after the general elections, to be held before the expiry of the Government's term of office in May 1982. In December, however, he took over the finance portfolio after a second financial scandal implicating senior civil servants.

Government

Legislative power is held by the unicameral House of Representatives, with 104 members: 85 elected for five years by universal adult suffrage, 12 Paramount Chiefs (one from each District) and seven members appointed by the President. Executive power is held by the President. Under the 1978 Constitution, the President, formerly elected by the House, is elected for a seven-year term by the National Delegates' Conference of the APC. He appoints and leads the Cabinet, including two Vice-Presidents but no Prime Minister. The country is divided into four regions: the Northern, Eastern and Southern Provinces, and the Western Area. These are administered through the Ministry of the Interior and divided into 147 Chiefdoms, each controlled by a Paramount Chief and Council of Elders known as the Tribal Authority.

Defence

In July 1981 the armed forces comprised an army of 2,680 men. Paramilitary forces number about 800.

Economic Affairs

Agriculture employs about two-thirds of the working population, mainly on smallholdings. Rice is the staple crop, but imports are still necessary in spite of government attempts to achieve self-sufficiency. Cocoa and coffee are the main export crops, and production of palm oil, groundnuts, sugar, fruit and vegetables is also being encouraged. There is much potential for developing fishing and forestry; major fishing projects are under way, including the expansion of the fishing fleet and of port and storage facilities.

Minerals are an important source of foreign exchange. Iron ore production ceased between 1975 and 1980 but it was hoped to resume exports by 1983. Diamonds usually account for over half of export receipts, although smuggling is a problem. In 1981 plans were made to mine diamond deposits in the Kono area and prospecting continued for gold, petroleum and natural gas. The exploitation of bauxite and rutile (titanium ore) is of increasing importance. Bauxite is mined at Makanji, and there are plans to exploit the reserves at Port Loko. Sierra Rutile started production in 1979.

Industry is on a small scale, covering palm oil, furniture, weaving and agro-based industries. In 1973 Sierra Leone and Liberia concluded the Mano River Agreement (to which Guinea became party in 1980) to establish an economic union. In 1981 the three countries became a single customs area, and joint industrial development and training schemes are to be established eventually.

Sierra Leone's economy has been badly affected by the rise in import prices for petroleum, machinery, manufactures and food since 1976 and consequently the trade deficit and inflation rate have increased, and foreign exchange reserves are scarce. Austerity measures were introduced in 1977 and the Leone was devalued in November 1978 by being linked to the IMF Special Drawing Right and not to the pound sterling.

Between 1978 and 1980 G.D.P. grew by 3-4 per cent annually, falling short of the 6.5 per cent projected by the 1975-79 Development Plan. In 1980/81 growth dropped further to 1 per cent, export earnings falling drastically due to depressed world markets, and the balance of payments deficit stood at Le. 96.4 million. Two interim investment plans, covering 1979-81, gave priority to agriculture and public administration; almost half the 1980 budget was allocated to improving facilities for the OAU summit held in Freetown that year. An IMF-approved investment and stabilization programme for 1981-84 projected total expenditure of Le. 560.8 million and stressed self-sufficiency in staple foods, the development of an efficient infrastructure and increased mineral production. Strict controls on expenditure and external borrowing were to be imposed, and measures initiated to reduce the budgetary and balance of payments deficits.

Transport and Communications

The railway system is being reactivated. An 84-km. line links Pepel port and the iron ore mines at Marampa. The road network is being considerably expanded. There are over 7,000 km. of roads, of which less than a fifth is paved. A road linking Freetown to Monrovia in Liberia is planned as one of the Mano River Union development schemes. Inland waterways total 789 km., much of it navigable for only three months in the year. The chief ports are Freetown, Pepel and Bonthe. Internal air transport is well developed and international air services are provided by Sierra Leone Airways in conjunction with British Caledonian Airways. There is an international airport at Lungi.

Social Welfare

In 1980 there were 44 hospitals, 39 health centres, 51 dispensaries and 30 maternal and child health centres.

The Ministry of Social Welfare provides community development centres, youth clubs and maternity welfare centres. Missions and voluntary organizations play an important part. The People's Republic of China provides medical personnel.

Education

Sierra Leone has both private and government-owned schools but they are insufficient to meet the country's educational needs. It is estimated that in 1977 40 per cent of children aged 5 to 11 years attended primary school and 12 per cent of children aged 12 to 16 years attended secondary school. In 1979 there were 1,118 primary schools, 143 secondary schools, 4 trade and technical institutes, 6 teacher training colleges and a university. Illiteracy is estimated at 85 per cent.

Tourism

The Tourist Board was set up in 1962 to develop Sierra Leone's tourist potential, and several projects are under way. The main attractions are the beaches, the mountains, jungle and game reserves. In 1977/78 there were 24,000 tourists and 457 hotel rooms.

Public Holidays

1982: May 31st (Whit Monday), July 23rd (Id ul Fitr, end of Ramadan), August 2nd (Bank Holiday), August 24th (President's birthday), September 29th (Id ul Adha, Feast of the Sacrifice), December 25th, 26th (Christmas and Boxing Day), December 28th (Mouloud, Birth of the Prophet).

1983: January 1st (New Year's Day), April 1st-4th (Easter).

Muslim religious holidays, dependent on the lunar calendar, may differ slightly from the dates given.

FINANCE

100 cents=1 leone (Le.).

Coins: ½, 1, 5, 10, 20 and 50 cents.

Notes: 50 cents; 1, 2, 5 and 10 leones.

Exchange rates (December 1981): £1 sterling=2.252 leones; U.S. $1=1.171 leones.

100 leones=£44.40=SS5.41.

Note: The leone was introduced in August 1964, replacing the West African pound (at par with the pound sterling) at the rate of £1=2 leones. The exchange rate of £1 sterling=2 leones remained in force until November 1978. From September 1949 the pound had been valued at U.S. $2.80, so the initial value of the leone was $1.40 ($1=71.43 Sierra Leone cents). In November 1967 the leone was devalued (in line with sterling) to $1.20 ($1=83.33 S.L. cents). This valuation remained in force until August 1971. The exchange rate was 1 leone=$1.3029 ($1=76.75 S.L. cents) from December 1971 to June 1972, after which the leone "floated" (in line with sterling) until November 1978. The average value of the leone was $1.2509 in 1972; $1.2261 in 1973; $1.1695 in 1974; $1.1109 in 1975; 90.31 U.S. cents in 1976; 87.28 U.S. cents in 1977. In November 1978 the leone's link with sterling was broken and the currency was valued in terms of the IMF Special Drawing Right (based on a weighted "basket" of currencies), with a mid-point of 1 SDR=1.36693 leones. The leone's average value was 95.23 U.S. cents in 1978; 94.53 U.S. cents in 1979; 95.28 U.S. cents in 1980.

THE CONSTITUTION

(June 1978)

Sierra Leone is a Sovereign Republic and recognizes a one-party form of government. The All-People's Congress (APC), established prior to the commencement of the Constitution, is deemed to be the one officially recognized party. The Constitution provides for an executive President, to be elected by members of the National Delegates' Conference of the APC, a First Vice-President, principal assistant of the President, and a Second Vice-President, both of whom shall be appointed by the President. The President may be elected for a period of seven years, and no President may hold office for more than two consecutive terms. There shall be a 16-member Defence Council with the President as Chairman, to advise the President on all major matters of policy relating to defence and strategy, the role of the armed forces, and military budgeting and finance.

The House of Representatives, the supreme legislative authority, consists of a Speaker and Deputy Speaker, not fewer than 60 elected members of Parliament, whose nomination must be approved by the Central Committee of the Party, and not more than seven Presidentially-appointed members. Constitutional provisions are designed to safeguard certain fundamental democratic liberties concerning the House of Representatives, elections, appointments, the Supreme Court, the office of Paramount Chief and the independence of the judiciary. The President may at any time prorogue or dissolve Parliament.

Under the 1978 Constitution a referendum is required for approval of any fundamental constitutional change.

Previously existing laws may be applied with such modifications as will bring them into conformity with the 1978 Constitution.

In November 1981 a bill was passed allowing for primary elections to the House of Representatives, in which voters may choose between APC-approved candidates, and for which civil servants may stand.

ELECTIONS, MAY 1977*

PARTY	SEATS
All-People's Congress (APC)	70
Sierra Leone People's Party (SLPP)	15

* Including eight seats where polling was postponed to October 1977. At May 1st, 1978, the APC held 74 seats and the SLPP 11 seats. After the introduction of a one-party state in June 1978, the remaining SLPP members joined the APC.

POLITICAL PARTYAll-People's Congress (APC): 39 Siaka Stevens St., Freetown; f. 1960; holds all 104 seats in the House of Representatives; Leader and Sec.-Gen. DR. SIAKA PROBYN STEVENS.

Following the adoption of the one-party Constitution in June 1978, the Sierra Leone People's Party no longer exists; all members of the House of Representatives were required to make a declaration that they were members of the APC; failure to do so would cause them to lose their seats.

SINGAPORE

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of Singapore comprises one main island and several offshore islands, situated approximately 77 miles (124 km.) north of the Equator, off the southernmost tip of the Malay Peninsula to which it is linked by a causeway. The climate is equatorial with a uniformly high daily and annual temperature varying between 24°C–27°C (75°F–80°F). Relative humidity is high, and the average annual rainfall is 96 in. There are no well-defined wet and dry seasons. The national language is Malay, and there are four official languages—Malay, Chinese (Mandarin), Tamil and English. The language of administration is English. There is complete religious freedom: the main religions practised are Islam, Christianity, Buddhism, Hinduism, Confucianism and Daoism. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) has two equal horizontal stripes of red and white, with a white crescent moon and five white stars in the top left. The capital is Singapore City.

Recent History

After the Second World War, Singapore was governed by the British Military Administration. When civil rule was restored in 1946, Singapore was detached from the other Straits Settlements and became a separate crown colony. A new constitution in 1955 introduced some measure of self-government, and in 1959 the state achieved complete internal self-government with Lee Kuan Yew as Prime Minister. The Federation of Malaysia came into being in September 1963, with Singapore as a constituent state. On August 9th, 1965, the association was ended and Singapore was separated from Malaysia and became a fully independent and sovereign nation. In October 1965 the new state joined the Commonwealth and in December it became a republic, with a President as constitutional Head of State. In May 1973 the last major ties with Malaysia, currency and finance, were broken. In September 1972 Lee Kuan Yew's ruling People's Action Party (PAP) won all the 65 parliamentary seats in the general election, also contested by five opposition parties. Singapore has achieved considerable political stability through the application of comprehensive legislation. The threat of communist subversion has been a major preoccupation.

After independence the Government supported a strong U.S. military presence in South-East Asia. However, with the collapse of American influence in the area during 1974 and 1975, Singapore adopted a conciliatory attitude towards the People's Republic of China and its communist neighbours. The Government called for the removal of foreign bases from ASEAN countries and advocated a policy of neutrality. In 1976 and 1977 Singapore aimed to reduce tension in Indochina and to consolidate its trade links with China, although still unwilling to establish diplomatic relations. After the Vietnamese-backed take-over in Kampuchea in 1979, Singapore contributed to the UN decision to continue to recognize the Khmer Rouge government-in-exile, supported by the Chinese, but throughout 1980 Lee Kuan Yew worked for compromise between the conflicting claims of the Chinese and the Soviet-supported Vietnamese.

At the 1976 parliamentary election the PAP took all 69 seats, including 16 uncontested. In June 1980 Lee Kuan Yew gave the portfolios of education and foreign affairs to two younger ministers. After the PAP's sweeping victory in the December general elections, Lee continued this trend in a further reshuffle, bringing younger ministers to the fore in Singapore politics.

The PAP suffered an unexpected setback in October 1981, when a parliamentary by-election (arising from the appointment of C. V. Devan Nair as President to replace the late Dr. Benjamin Sheares) resulted in victory for the Workers' Party candidate, the first opposition win since 1968. The PAP's defeat, however, did not lead to any modification of its policies.

Government

Legislative power rests with the unicameral Parliament of 75 members, elected by universal adult suffrage for five years (subject to dissolution). The President is elected by Parliament for a four-year term as a constitutional Head of State. Effective executive authority rests with the Cabinet, led by the Prime Minister, which is appointed by the President and responsible to Parliament.

Defence

In July 1981 the Singapore armed forces had an estimated 42,000 troops: 35,000 in the army, 3,000 in the navy and 4,000 in the air force. Paramilitary forces numbered 37,500 and defence expenditure for 1980 was set at S$1,260 million.

Economic Affairs

Strategically situated for trade, Singapore is the largest port in South-East Asia. Its major trading partners in 1980 were Malaysia, the U.S.A., Japan and Saudi Arabia. It handles most of Peninsular Malaysia's external trade and is the world centre of the rubber and tin markets. Entrepôt trade (chiefly in crude rubber, timber and pepper) and petroleum products account for about 70 per cent of Singapore's total trade. The services sector, including transport, communications, finance, storage and tourism, is important in providing foreign exchange and financing a growing trade deficit. Transport and communications expanded by 12 per cent and accounted for 20 per cent of the overall increase in G.D.P. in 1980.

To diversify the economy, Singapore has developed the industrial and manufacturing sectors. The principal industries are petroleum refining, shipbuilding and repairing, textiles, electronics and sawmilling. Manufacturing employed about 30 per cent of the labour force in 1980, and accounted for about 24 per cent of G.D.P. (scheduled to reach 31 per cent by 1990). In 1980 the manufacturing sector increased production by 11 per cent, accounting for 24 per cent of total G.D.P. growth, compared with 14 and 31 per cent respectively in 1979. Unemployment fell to 3 per cent in 1980. The labour shortage had made it necessary to import workers from other ASEAN countries. In order to reduce demand for foreign workers (totalling over 100,000 by the end of 1979) and to encourage employers away from low-skill, labour-intensive industries towards high technology and capital investment, the Government announced average wage increases of about 20 per cent in June 1979, following this with similar increases in 1980, with an additional financial incentive for individual productivity. The rate of inflation averaged 8.5 per cent in 1980.

Although Singapore has no petroleum reserves of its own, it has the third largest refining complex in the world. Oil is the principal import and oil products are the main export. In 1980 petroleum products contributed more than 28 per cent to total export earnings. The volume of crude petroleum processed in Singapore reached 263.8 million barrels in 1979, representing an annual increase of 6 per cent, compared with 15 per cent in 1978. A large petrochemicals complex was planned to begin operations in 1982.

Less than one-fifth of the land area is under cultivation, and the agricultural sector's contribution to G.D.P. is minimal. Agriculture, forestry and fishing employed only 1.6 per cent of the labour force in 1980. The main farming activities are pig rearing, poultry production, fruit and vegetable gardening and orchid cultivation.

Singapore enjoys one of the highest per caput incomes in Asia, indigenous per head G.N.P. reaching U.S. $3,462 in 1980. Since 1976, with a recovery in manufacturing output and investment, the real growth rate of G.D.P. has risen steadily, to reach 9.3 per cent in 1979 and 10.2 per cent in 1980. The trade deficit increased from S$7,394 million in 1979 to S$9,892.5 million in 1980, but the overall balance of payments remained in surplus, standing at S$1,137 million in 1979 and S$1,435 million in 1980. Singapore has a strong currency, backed 100 per cent by gold and foreign assets. In December 1980 reserves stood at S$13,758 million. The Government is promoting Singapore as an international banking centre. In February 1978 certificates of deposits (CDs) denominated in U.S. dollars were introduced to attract more international funds to Singapore. The Singapore Gold Exchange was launched in November 1978.

Transport and Communications

Singapore is the world's second busiest port, and is used by more than 300 major shipping lines. In September 1981 there were 2,338 km. of roads, of which 2,030 km. were asphalt-paved. The road system includes dual carriageways, flyovers and expressways. There is a railway link with the Malaysian railways system. The new international airport at Changi has been operational since July 1981.

Social Welfare

The Social Welfare Department, aided by local voluntary bodies which are co-ordinated by the Singapore Council of Social Service, provides a wide range of welfare services to individuals and families in need. There are no state social insurance systems but there is a Central Provident Fund into which contributions must be paid by employers and employees. In April 1980 Singapore had 13 government hospitals, with 8,485 beds, and 1,826 physicians. There were also 8 private hospitals with 1,261 beds.

Education

Primary and secondary education is available in the four official languages of Malay, Chinese, Tamil and English. The Government is encouraging the use of English as a common language, and, as part of a policy of bilingualism, in 1978 examinations in English and Mandarin Chinese became compulsory for pupils wishing to enter secondary education. The New Education System (primary and secondary levels) allows less able pupils to complete their education over a longer period of time, if they choose. In December 1980 there were 486 schools. Outside the school system there are several higher education centres and vocational institutes providing craft and industrial training and technical institutes providing advanced craft training. There is a technical college, a polytechnic and a teacher training college. The two universities were amalgamated in 1980 to form the National University of Singapore. Adult education courses are conducted by a statutory board. Education is not compulsory but, among persons aged 10 years and over, 80 per cent received some form of education in 1977.

Tourism

Between 1975 and 1980 tourism expanded at an annual rate of 13.6 per cent and plans are being made to accommodate an increasing number of visitors. In 1980 the 2,562,085 tourists spent an estimated S$1,753 million.

* From the first to the third day of the first moon of the lunar calendar.

Weights and Measures

Conversion to the metric system was due to be completed during 1980; imperial and local weights and measures are also in use. The following are local units.:

Weight: 1 tahlil = 1½ oz (37.8 grammes).

16 tahlils = 1 kati = 1¼ lb. (604.8 grammes).

100 katis = 1 picul = 133½ lb. (60.48 kg.).

40 piculs = 1 koyan = 5,333½ lb. (2,419.2 kg.).

Capacity: 1 chupak = 1 quart (1.1365 litres).

1 gantang = 1 gallon (4.5461 litres).

Currency and Exchange Rates

100 cents = 1 Singapore dollar (S$).

Exchange rates (December 1981):

£1 sterling = S$3.933;

U.S. $1 = S$2.044.

FINANCE

100 cents=1 Singapore dollar (S$).

Coins: 1, 5, 10, 20 and 50 cents; 1 dollar.

Notes: 1, 5, 10, 20, 25, 50, 100, 500, 1,000 and 10,000 dollars.

Exchange rates (December 1981): £1 sterling=S$3.933; U.S. $1=2.044.
S$100=£25.43=U.S. $48.92.

Note: The Singapore dollar (S$) was introduced in June 1967, replacing (at par) the Malayan dollar (M$). From September 1949 the Malayan dollar was valued at 2s. 4d. sterling (£1=M$8.5714) or 32.667 U.S. cents (U.S. $1=M$3.0612). This valuation in terms of U.S. currency remained in effect until August 1971. Between December 1971 and February 1973 the Singapore dollar was valued at 35.467 U.S. cents (U.S. $1=S$2.8195). From February to June 1973, the Singapore dollar's value was 39.407 U.S. cents (U.S. $1=S$2.5376). In terms of sterling, the exchange rate was £1=S$7.347 from November 1967 to June 1972. The formal link with the Malaysian dollar, begun in June 1967, ended in May 1973, but the Brunei dollar remains tied to the Singapore dollar. Since June 1973 the Singapore dollar has been allowed to "float". The average exchange rate (Singapore dollars per U.S. dollar) was: 2.809 in 1972; 2.444 in 1973; 2.437 in 1974; 2.371 in 1975; 2.471 in 1976; 2.439 in 1977; 2.274 in 1978; 2.175 in 1979; 2.141 in 1980.

THE CONSTITUTION

(Promulgated 1958, subsequently amended)

HEAD OF STATE

The Head of State is the President, elected by Parliament for a four-year term. He normally acts on the advice of the Cabinet.

THE CABINET

The Cabinet, headed by the Prime Minister, is appointed by the President and is responsible to Parliament.

THE LEGISLATURE

The Legislature consists of a Parliament of seventy-five members, presided over by a Speaker who may be elected from the members of Parliament themselves or appointed by Parliament although he may not be a member of Parliament. Members of Parliament are elected by universal adult suffrage.

A 21-Member Presidential Council chaired by the Chief Justice examines material of racial or religious significance, including legislation, to see whether it differentiates between racial or religious communities or contains provisions inconsistent with the fundamental liberties of Singapore citizens.

CITIZENSHIP

Under the constitution Singapore citizenship may be acquired either by birth, descent or registration. Persons born when Singapore was a constituent State of Malaysia could also acquire Singapore citizenship by enrolment or naturalization under the constitution of Malaysia.

SOLOMON ISLANDS

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

Solomon Islands is a scattered Melanesian archipelago in the south-western Pacific Ocean, east of Papua New Guinea. The country includes most of the Solomon Islands (those to the north-west being part of Papua New Guinea), Ontong Java Islands (Lord Howe Atoll), Rennell Island and the Santa Cruz Islands, about 300 miles (500 km.) to the east. The climate is equatorial, with small seasonal variations governed by the trade winds. In Honiara the average temperature is about 80°F (27°C) and the average annual rainfall is about 85 inches (2,160 mm.). The official language is English, although Pidgin is more widely used and understood. More than 80 different local languages exist and no vernacular is common to the whole country. Over 95 per cent of the people are Christian. The flag is light blue and green, divided diagonally by a narrow yellow stripe from lower left to upper right. On the blue section are five white five-pointed stars in the upper hoist. The capital is Honiara, on the island of Guadalcanal.

Recent History

The northern Solomon Islands became a German protectorate in 1885 and the southern Solomons a British protectorate in 1893. Rennell Island and the Santa Cruz Islands were added to the British protectorate in 1898 and 1899. Germany ceded most of the northern Solomons and Ontong Java Islands to the United Kingdom between 1898 and 1900. The whole territory, known as the British Solomon Islands Protectorate, was placed under the jurisdiction of the Western Pacific High Commission (WPHC), with its headquarters in Fiji.

The Solomon Islands were invaded by Japan in 1942 but, after a fierce battle on Guadalcanal, most of the islands were recaptured by U.S. forces in 1943. After the Second World War the protectorate's capital was moved from Tulagi Island to Honiara. In January 1953 the headquarters of the WPHC also moved to Honiara. Meanwhile, elected local councils were established on most of the islands and by 1966 almost the whole territory was covered by such councils.

Under a new constitution, introduced in October 1960, a Legislative Council and an Executive Council were established for the protectorate's central administration. Initially, all members of both bodies were appointed but from 1964 the Legislative Council included elected members and the elective element was gradually increased. Another constitution, introduced in March 1970, established a single Governing Council of 17 elected members, three ex officio members and (until the end of 1971) up to six public service members. A new Governing Council of 24 directly elected members was formed in 1973, when a ministerial system was introduced.

A further new constitution, adopted in April 1974, instituted a single Legislative Assembly with 24 members who chose a Chief Minister with the right to appoint his own Council of Ministers. A new office of Governor of the Protectorate was also created to assume almost all the functions previously exercised in the territory by the High Commissioner for the Western Pacific. Solomon Mamaloni, leader of the newly founded People's Progress Party, was appointed the first Chief Minister in August 1974. The territory was officially renamed the Solomon Islands in June 1975, although it retained protectorate status.

In January 1976 the Solomon Islands received internal self-government, with the Chief Minister presiding over the Council of Ministers in place of the Governor. In June elections were held for an enlarged Legislative Assembly and in July the Assembly elected one of its new members, Peter Kenilorea, to be Chief Minister. Solomon Islands (as it was restyled) became an independent state, within the Commonwealth, on July 7th, 1978. The Legislative Assembly became the National Parliament and designated Kenilorea the first Prime Minister.

The main political issue confronting the new nation was the proposed decentralization of authority to the regions, support for which was particularly strong in the Western District, the most commercially developed part of the country. The first general elections since independence were held in August 1980. Independents won more seats than any of the three parties. Parliament again elected Kenilorea Prime Minister by an overwhelming majority. In August 1981 Parliament passed a vote of "no confidence" in Kenilorea and chose Solomon Mamaloni to succeed him as Prime Minister. One of the first acts of the new Government was to create five ministerial posts with responsibility for provincial affairs.

Government

Under the 1978 Constitution, executive authority is vested in the British monarch, as Head of State, and is exercisable by her representative, the Governor-General, who is appointed on the advice of Parliament and acts on the advice of the Cabinet. Legislative power is vested in the unicameral National Parliament, with 38 members elected for up to four years by universal adult suffrage. The Cabinet is composed of the Prime Minister, elected by Parliament, and 14 other Ministers appointed by the Governor-General on the Prime Minister's recommendation. The Cabinet is responsible to Parliament. The country comprises four Districts, within which there are eight local government councils, elected by universal adult suffrage. The Constitution provides for further devolution of power to provincial authorities.

Economic Affairs

About 90 per cent of the population depend on subsistence agriculture, the main crops being coconuts, sweet potatoes, taro, yams, cassava, garden vegetables and fruit. Fishing is also a traditional subsistence activity. The principal commercial agricultural product is copra, which was for many years the islands' main export. More than 60 per cent of the country's copra production comes from smallholders and the rest from plantations.

Since the 1960s the economy has been successfully diversified away from dependence on copra exports. In 1980 fish, particularly tuna, accounted for about 38 per cent of total export earnings, while timber contributed almost 25 per cent, copra 17 per cent and palm oil a further 9 per cent. Rice is also exported. Faced with an increasing trade deficit and poor prices for Solomon Islands' principal export commodities, the Government sought to encourage exports and the production and consumption of import substitutes by a currency devaluation of 6 per cent in June 1981 and by selective duties on imports.

A heavily mineralized area at Betilonga and in the Sutakiki Valley, on Guadalcanal, has been investigated for gold, silver and copper, and there have been surveys of phosphate deposits, estimated at 10 million metric tons, on Bellona Island and of deposits of asbestos at Kumboro, on Choiseul, and high-grade bauxite on Rennell and Vaghena Islands.

Until independence, aid was mainly from the United Kingdom, Australia, and New Zealand, although Solomon Islands also received multilateral aid from the Asian Development Bank, the European Development Fund, the UN and its agencies and the IMF, which increased after 1978. The British Government agreed to provide a £23 million post-independence financial settlement over four years.

The islands' transport facilities are seriously inadequate, which hampers agricultural and economic development, but the Government is trying to minimize these problems by emphasizing decentralized rural development to prevent a population drift to the capital. In the 1975-79 Development Plan, the Government allocated almost half of public capital expenditure to economic infrastructure projects. These were mainly road construction, the expansion and modernization of the Government shipping fleet and the construction of wharves and telecommunications, as well as a hydroelectric scheme on the Lungga River on Guadalcanal. The 1980-84 Development Plan is also concentrated on rural development, improved infrastructure and education, and devolution of power to the provinces.

Transport and Communications

Despite progress in road construction, shipping still plays by far the most important part in Solomon Islands transport between and around the islands. The main ports are Honiara, Yandina and Gizo. Three airports are open to international traffic and 20 other airports take internal traffic. In July 1979 a new satellite earth station in Solomon Islands greatly improved telecommunications.

Social Welfare

The Ministry of Health and Medical Services is responsible for Government health projects and maintained eight hospitals, with 676 beds, and 33 rural clinics in 1978. There were also two church hospitals with 144 beds. A National Provident Fund was established in 1976 to provide social security benefits to all persons in paid employment.

Education

More than two-thirds of school-age children receive formal education, mainly in state schools. In 1976 and 1977 eight "New Secondary Schools", now renamed Provincial Secondary Schools, were opened to provide courses of a practical and local nature, mainly in agriculture and development studies. In 1980, 28,870 children attended primary schools and 3,547 children attended secondary schools. There is one teacher-training school and a technical institute. Scholarships are available for higher education at various universities overseas. In 1977 the Solomon Islands Centre of the University of the Pacific opened in Honiara.

THE CONSTITUTION

A new constitution came into effect on July 7th, 1978, when Solomon Islands became independent.

The main provisions are that Solomon Islands is a constitutional monarchy with the British sovereign (represented locally by a Governor-General, who must be a Solomon Islands citizen) as Head of State, while legislative power is vested in the unicameral National Parliament composed of 38 members, elected by universal adult suffrage for four years (subject to dissolution), and executive authority is effectively held by the Cabinet, led by the Prime Minister. The Governor-General is appointed for up to five years, on the advice of Parliament, and acts in almost all matters on the advice of the Cabinet. The Prime Minister is elected by and from members of Parliament. Other Ministers are appointed by the Governor-General, on the Prime Minister's recommendation, from members of Parliament. The Cabinet is responsible to Parliament. Emphasis is laid on the devolution of power to proposed provincial governments, and traditional chief and leaders have a special role within these arrangements.

The constitution contains comprehensive guarantees of fundamental human rights and freedoms, and provides for the introduction of a "leadership code" and the appointment of an Ombudsman and a Public Solicitor. It also provides for "the establishment of the underlying law, based on the customary law and concepts of the Solomon Islands people". Solomon Islands citizenship was automatically conferred on the indigenous people of the islands and on other residents with close ties with the islands upon independence. The acquisition of land is reserved for indigenous inhabitants or their descendants.

The 38-member National Parliament, established following independence in July 1978, succeeded the former Legislative Assembly. Elections are held every four years. In the August 1980 elections for the National Parliament the majority of candidates stood as independents. A majority of those elected chose Peter Kenilorea to be Prime Minister, but in August 1981 voted to replace him by Solomon Mamaloni. The Government is a coalition of the People's Alliance Party, the National Democratic Party and the Independents.

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

The High Court is a Superior Court of Record with jurisdiction and powers as prescribed by the Solomon Islands Constitution or by any law for the time being in force in Solomon Islands. The Judges of the High Court are the Chief Justice, resident in Solomon Islands and employed by its government, and Puisne Judges, who are non-resident and visit the territory as and when necessary. Appeals from this Court go to the Fiji Court of Appeal.

In addition there are Magistrates' Courts staffed by qualified and lay magistrates exercising limited jurisdiction in both civil and criminal matters. There are also Local Courts staffed by elders of the local communities which have jurisdiction in the areas of established native custom, petty crime and local government by-laws. In 1975 Customary Land Appeal Courts were established to hear land appeals from local courts.

Chief Justice of the High Court: Hon. FRANCIS DALY.

Registrar of the High Court: K. BROWN.

RELIGION

Over 95 per cent of the people are Christian, and the remainder follow traditional beliefs. According to the census of 1976, about 33 per cent of the population adhered to the Church of Melanesia (Anglican), 19 per cent were Roman Catholics, 17 per cent belonged to the South Seas Evangelical Church, 11 per cent to the United Church and 10 per cent supported the Seventh-Day Adventists.

TRADE UNION

Solomon Islands General Workers' Union: Honiara; Pres. JOSES TAUNGENA.

TRANSPORTROADS

There are about 1,300 km. of roads maintained by the central and provincial governments; in 1976, main roads covered 455 km. In addition, there are 800 km. of privately maintained roads mainly for plantation use. Road construction and maintenance is difficult because of the nature of the country, and what roads there are serve as feeder roads to the main town of an island. Honiara now has a main road running about 65 kilometres each side of it along the north coast of Guadalcanal, and Malaita has a road 157 kilometres long running north from Auki and around the northern end of the island to the Lau Lagoon, where canoe transport takes over; and one running south for 35 kilometres to Masa. On Makira a road has been built linking Kira Kira and Kakoranga, a distance of 35 kilometres. Before it abandoned mining investigations in 1977, the Mitsui Mining and Smelting Company built 40 kilometres of road on Rennell Island.

SHIPPING

Regular shipping services (mainly cargo) exist between Solomon Islands and Australia, New Zealand, Papua New Guinea, Hong Kong, Japan, Singapore, European ports and various Pacific Islands, including Fiji, Tonga and New Caledonia. In 1981 internal shipping was provided by 34 ships of the government marine fleet and about 106 commercial vessels. The three main ports are at Honiara, Yandina and Gizo but a new deep-sea harbour is being planned for Noro on New Georgia to replace the port at Gizo. The ports are controlled by the Solomon Islands Ports Authority.

Solomon Islands Ports Authority: P.O.B. 307, Honiara; Chair. A. B. WICKHAM; Gen. Man. JAMES VAUKEI; Sec. N. J. CONSTANTINE; Chief of Port Operations JOHN KWAEOTA (acting); Harbourmaster Captain J. MURDOCH.

Shipping companies operating freight services to Solomon Islands include Sofrana-Unilines, Kyowa Line, Ocean Pacific Line, P.N.G. Shipping Corporation, Kambara Kisen Line, Chief Container Service, China Navigation Service, Columbus Line, the Bank Line and Warner Pacific Line. Solomon Islands joined the Pacific Forum Line in 1977. P&O and Sitmar Cruises are amongst the companies which operate passenger services to the islands.

CIVIL AVIATION

Three airports are open to international traffic and a further 20 take internal flights.

Solomon Islands Airways Ltd. (Solair): P.O.B. 23, Honiara; f. 1968; internal scheduled and charter services to 24 airstrips and water ports, and scheduled services between Honiara and Kieta (Papua New Guinea) and Espiritu Santo (Vanuatu); Gen. THE CONSTITUTION

The 1960 Constitution was suspended following the coup of October 1969. A new Constitution was approved by a referendum on August 25th, 1979, and received Presidential assent on September 23rd, 1979. Its main provisions are summarized below.

The Somali State: The Somali Democratic Republic is a socialist state led by the working class. Islam is the state religion. All citizens, regardless of sex, creed, origin and language, have equal rights and duties before the law. The Republic upholds the principle of self-determination of peoples and, through peaceful and legal means, shall support the liberation of Somali territories under colonial occupation, and shall encourage the unity of the Somali people through their own free will. The Somali Revolutionary Socialist Party (SRSP) shall have supreme political and economic authority; no other political party or organization may be established.

The President: The President shall be Head of State and Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces. Political leadership of Party and State are indivisible. The candidate for the Presidency shall be proposed by the Central Committee of the SRSP and shall be elected by a majority of at least two-thirds of the deputies of the People's Assembly. His term of office shall be six years. The President is empowered to appoint and dismiss ministers and deputy ministers and is chairman of joint meetings of party and state institutions. He may initiate referenda concerning decisions of national importance and may, after consultations with the National Defence Council, declare a state of emergency.

The People's Assembly: This shall be a legislative body consisting of 121 deputies elected by the people through direct secret ballot and an additional six presidential nominees. The normal life of the Assembly is five years. The People's Assembly shall elect the President and is also empowered to relieve him of office. A two-thirds majority of the Assembly may amend the Constitution. No amendments to the Constitution may affect the republican system of the country, the adoption of the principle of socialism, territorial unity or the fundamental rights and freedoms of the citizen.

ROADS

In 1978 there were 19,380 km. of roads of which 2,153 were asphalted, the rest mainly gravel. The World Bank is financing projects to build roads between Hargeisa and Berbera, and Jowhar and Bullo Burti. Work has begun on the Hargeisa-Borama road. The International Development Association helped to finance a 216 km. road project linking Afgoi (near Mogadishu) with Baidoa. A highway to link Belet-Uen with Burao, built with Chinese aid at an estimated cost of 75 million Somali shillings, was completed in 1978. The United Arab Emirates-financed 122-km. road between Berbera and Burao was opened in 1981 and a 257-km. road between Goluen and Gelib, completing a link between Mogadishu and Kismayu, was begun in 1977, with financial aid from the EEC and the Arab Fund for Economic and Social Development.

SHIPPING

Merca, Berbera, Mogadishu and Kismayu are the chief ports. A new port with modern shipping berths was completed at Mogadishu in 1977. Construction of an oil tanker terminal in the deep-water port was scheduled to begin in late 1979.

Brocklebank Line, Clan Line and Lloyd Triestino provide regular services and other lines call irregularly.

CIVIL AVIATION

Mogadishu has an international airport. There are airports at Hargeisa and Baidoa and six other airfields.

HUSSEIN MOHAMOUD MOHAMED; Vice-Pres. ABDULLAHI AHMED SHIRE.

The following foreign airlines serve Somalia: Air Djibouti, Alitalia, Democratic Yemen Airlines, Kenya Airways and Saudia (Saudi Arabia).

SOUTH AFRICA

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of South Africa occupies the southern extremity of the African continent. To the north-west lies Namibia (South West Africa), with Botswana and Zimbabwe to the north, Mozambique to the north-east, and Swaziland to the east. South African territory encircles the independent state of Lesotho. The climate is warm and sunny, with average temperatures about 17°C (63°F). The official languages are Afrikaans and English; the principal African languages are Xhosa, Zulu and Sesotho. The population is mainly Christian. The politically influential Dutch Reformed Church is adhered to by 55 per cent of the white population. About a fifth of the African Christians belong to African Independent Churches and others are Methodists and Anglicans. Most Asians are Hindus. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) is a horizontal tricolour of orange, white and blue, charged in the centre of the white stripe with the Union Jack, the old Orange Free State flag, and the old Transvaal Vierkleur. The administrative capital is Pretoria, the legislative capital is Cape Town and the judicial capital is Bloemfontein.

Recent History

In 1910 four British dependencies were merged to form the Union of South Africa, a dominion under the British Crown. Under the Statute of Westminster, passed by the British Parliament in December 1931 and accepted by South Africa in June 1934, the Union was recognized as an independent country. Since the establishment of South Africa, national administration has been the exclusive preserve of Europeans, who form less than 17 per cent of the population. Only Europeans may vote and all members of Parliament must be white. Africans, who comprise over 70 per cent of the population, have no representation of any kind at national level.

The National Party came to power in 1948 and has ruled South Africa ever since. South Africa became a Republic in 1961. The main architect of apartheid (in theory the separate but equal development of all racial groups, in practice leading to white, particularly Afrikaner, supremacy) was Dr. Hendrik Verwoerd, Prime Minister from 1958 until his assassination in 1966. His successor was B. J. Vorster, formerly Minister of Justice, who continued Verwoerd's basic policies. Apartheid has been internationally condemned with the result that South Africa has been increasingly ostracized. This has led to its expulsion from many international bodies, and its withdrawal from the Commonwealth in 1961.

The South African Government has established "homelands", comprising some 13 per cent of all land in the country, for African ethnic groups as an integral part of the apartheid policy, and promised to make them independent by stages. The Transkei homeland was granted its independence in October 1976, Bophuthatswana in December 1977, Venda in September 1979 and Ciskei in December 1981. However, South Africa has been the only country to accord them diplomatic recognition. Some other homelands have declared their opposition to independence. The mass of discriminatory laws which regulate the lives of the Republic's African, Coloured and Asian populations and stringent security legislation have led to the detention without trial of many of the Government's opponents, the banning of African political organizations outside the homelands, a large prison population and the forced removal of hundreds of thousands of Africans under the Group Areas Act and the homelands policy. In 1976 Vorster used the virtually limitless powers conferred by the Internal Security Act to crush riots and strikes in African urban areas. These began in June at Soweto (South-Western Township), near Johannesburg, and spread to many other black and Coloured communities. Several hundred people died in confrontation with the police and many more were detained without trial. Allegations of police brutality culminated in international indignation at the death in detention of a black community leader, Steve Biko, in September 1977. There was further serious unrest in 1980, when widespread strikes, and a boycott of schools by Coloured and black students against the inequalities and segregation in education, led to about 40 deaths in riots and numerous arrests and dismissals of workers.

The parliamentary majority of the National Party (NP) increased in each election between 1948 and 1970, when the opposition United Party (UP) made small gains. These were lost in the 1974 elections, which the Nationalists won convincingly. The UP was dissolved in June 1977 and replaced by the New Republican Party. Subsequent policy disagreements led to the creation of a second grouping, the Progressive Federal Party (PFP), which became the official opposition after the November 1977 general elections, at which the parliamentary majority of the NP was considerably strengthened. In the April 1981 general elections the NP lost several seats to the PFP, and the extreme right-wing Herstigte Nasionale Party quintupled its vote.

In September 1978 Vorster resigned as Prime Minister and was succeeded by Pieter Botha, who was then Minister of Defence. Botha had taken a "hard-line" policy on external affairs, having argued in 1975 for South Africa's disastrous intervention in Angola.

In cabinet reshuffles in November 1978 and August 1980, Botha, more liberal regarding internal policies, promoted several verligte ("enlightened") Cabinet members, a setback for the conservative wing of the NP. During 1979 black trade unions were legalized and some of the restrictions of "petty" apartheid were lifted. In 1979 Dr. Cornelius Mulder, former Minister of Information, was expelled from the NP following the disclosure of corruption and misappropriation of public funds in the disbanded Department of Information, and Vorster resigned from the largely honorary post of State President. In 1981, following the abolition of the Senate, a President's Council was formed to consider possible constitutional reforms. There are two distinct wings of the NP. The verligte, or liberal, wing is led by Pieter Botha, and advocates the formation of a confederation of white-controlled South Africa with the African homelands, with separate citizenships but a common South African nationality. This reformist policy is vehemently opposed by the hard-line verkrampte wing. In March 1982, following opposition to Pieter Botha's plans for power-sharing between Europeans, Coloureds and Asians, Dr. Andries Treurnicht, the former Minister of State Administration and Statistics, and 15 other extreme right-wing M.P.s were expelled from the NP.

Among other difficulties facing the Government was the worsening situation in Namibia (South West Africa), with frequent clashes between guerrilla groups of the South West Africa People's Organisation (SWAPO) and South African troops stationed in the territory. The South African army has also made long-distance raids across Namibia's border with Angola. Both the UN and the OAU recognize SWAPO as the "authentic representative of the Namibian people" and the International Court of Justice and the UN have declared South Africa's presence in Namibia illegal. A conference held in Geneva in January 1981 to arrange for UN-supervised elections in Namibia, as a prelude to complete independence, ended in total failure (See the chapter on Namibia, p. 1020). In 1981 there was also an increase in guerrilla attacks within South Africa by the African National Congress.

Following the transition to democratic government in Zimbabwe (formerly Rhodesia), South Africa is increasingly isolated politically, both in southern Africa and elsewhere. Zimbabwe severed diplomatic relations with South Africa in September 1980, although economic links were to be retained. Suggestions for wider unity in southern Africa, centred on the Republic, have been rejected by neighbouring states in favour of plans to reduce economic dependence on South Africa.

Government

Legislative power rests with the unicameral Parliament, the Senate having been abolished in 1980, made up exclusively of European (white) members who hold office for five years, subject to dissolution. The House of Assembly has 165 members directly elected by Europeans plus 20 nominated members. Only Europeans may vote and be elected or nominated. Representation of Namibia (South West Africa) in Parliament ceased in 1977.

Executive power is vested in the State President, elected by a joint session of Parliament for a seven-year term as constitutional Head of State. He acts on the advice of the Executive Council (Cabinet), led by the Prime Minister, which is appointed by the President and responsible to Parliament.

A President's Council consisting of 60 European, Coloured, Indian and Chinese members, chaired by the Vice-President, was introduced at the beginning of 1981 as an advisory body on constitutional reform. A separate council for the African population was proposed to complement the President's Council, but received insufficient support to be formed.

The Coloured Persons' Representative Council, introduced in 1969, was disbanded in 1980 prior to the proposed setting up of representative bodies for ethnic groups. However, lack of agreement on the status of these bodies prevented their introduction in 1980.

Each of the four provinces has an Administrator appointed by the State President for five years and a unicameral Provincial Council elected by whites for five years.

The "independence" of the Transkei, Bophuthatswana, Venda and Ciskei "homelands" is recognized only by South Africa; Legislative Assemblies have been created for the other six homelands.

Defence

In July 1981 the armed forces totalled 92,700 (including 23,200 regulars): army 76,000, navy 6,400 and air force 10,300. Military training is compulsory for all male European citizens for a period of two years. A small proportion of the total armed forces is composed of Africans and Coloureds. The Citizen Force reserve totalled 157,000, of whom the army had 130,000, the navy 2,000 and the air force 25,000. In 1981 the army had 66,000 conscripts, the navy 2,100 and the air force 4,000. Paramilitary forces numbered 90,000. A separate South West Africa Territory Force, under South African control, was established in August 1980. Defence expenditure was estimated at R 2,070 million in 1980.

Economic Affairs

Mining formed the basis of the modern South African economy. In 1979 it was estimated that the country held 81 per cent of the world's reserves of chromium ore, 51 per cent of gold, 78 per cent of manganese, 75 per cent of platinum and 49 per cent of vanadium. Total earnings from minerals were R 15,000 million in 1980. Gold is the major mineral export and accounted for 78 per cent of mineral earnings in 1979. Gold output declined from over 1,000 metric tons in 1970 to 663 tons in 1980, although rising gold prices have increased the value of sales. In April 1978 South Africa revalued its gold reserves in line with current market prices, raising the value of the Reserve Bank's holdings from R 287 million in 1977 to R 4,854 million in 1980. A combination of the rising free market price of gold and an increased demand for uranium, frequently found with gold, led in 1978 to the reworking of old gold mines and a major expansion of primary producing uranium mines. Production of uranium increased from 3,874 metric tons in 1977 to 6,086 tons in 1980. After gold and platinum, iron ore is the most valuable metal export, earning an estimated R 275 million in 1980. Of the 440,000 labourers in South African mines in 1980, 46 per cent came from neighbouring black states.

However, despite the importance of mining, manufacturing has for many years been the leading sector of the economy and in 1980 contributed about 23 per cent of G.D.P. The establishment of the South African Iron and Steel Industrial Corporation (ISCOR) and the South African Coal, Oil and Gas Corporation (SASOL) laid the foundations of the heavy engineering, chemical and petroleum industries. In 1979 Iran, from which South Africa had been importing 90 per cent of its petroleum, ended supplies, leading to an intensified search for alternative fuel sources and drastic fuel-saving measures, including price increases of about 50 per cent. Construction of a R 350 million project to produce ethanol from maize and sugar cane is planned and the Sasol 2 plant, designed to extract oil and gas products from coal, was due to be in full operation by early 1982. When the Sasol 3 plant reaches full production in 1986, the three together will provide almost half of South Africa's petroleum requirement. Exploration for petroleum deposits was started in 1965 and by January 1979 was estimated to have cost R 120 million, although no petroleum has been found in commercial quantities.

Industrial development has been dependent on the white population for capital, management and higher technical skill, with the Africans, Coloureds and Asians providing most of the unskilled labour force. Statutory job reservation ensured that certain jobs were held only by Europeans. However, following the report of the Wiehahn Commission in 1979 some job reservation legislation was removed, but the "Homelands" policy and migrant workers' lack of rights continued to place severe restrictions on the black work force. The wage gap between Europeans and Africans remains a source of discontent. Total European real earnings were seven times greater than African earnings in 1969 and remained five times greater in 1976.

Much livestock is reared in South Africa and there are valuable fruit, wine and fishing industries. The export of wool, maize, sugar and karakul pelts is important, but drought in 1979-80 has caused declining sugar and cereal production, and many cattle deaths.

The annual growth of G.D.P. averaged about 3 per cent during the 1970s, but rose to 8 per cent in 1980 owing to increases in the value of exports and net gold output, and an expansionary budget policy. However, the growth rate fell to 4.5 per cent in 1981, after a sharp fall in gold prices, and was predicted to fall to about 2 per cent in 1982. An economic development plan for 1976-81 suggested that living standards were unlikely to rise significantly during that period and that unemployment, which in 1977 was estimated at 20 per cent of the African labour force, would remain at a high level. After two years of expansionist policies, the 1981/82 budget introduced stricter monetary controls to regulate the decrease in the growth rate of the economy, the inflation rate of 15 per cent and the large balance of payments deficit. The 1981 current deficit was estimated at R 3,000 million, compared with a surplus of R 2,800 million in 1980. However, a 30 per cent increase in defence spending was estimated for 1981/82. Between July 1974 and October 1978 the rand's value in terms of South Africa's trading partners' currencies fell by over 20 per cent as a result of its link with the U.S. dollar and in February 1979 the Government set up a limited two-tier exchange rate, cutting the dollar link.

To counteract recurrent threats of UN economic sanctions and the country's vulnerability to variable inflow of foreign investment capital, South Africa is pursuing a policy of economic self-reliance and in November 1977 the Government assumed reserve powers to control and direct virtually all economic activity. An arms embargo against South Africa was imposed by the UN Security Council in November 1977.

Transport and Communications

Railways, ports, airways and harbours are administered by the state. There are no navigable rivers. Private bus services are regulated to dove-tail with the railways. Roads are good and a national highway system is being built. There are many internal and international air services and considerable ocean shipping traffic. An 800-km. railway line links Sishen with Saldanha Bay for the export of iron ore and associated products. A substantial extension has been made to the harbours at Richards Bay and Saldanha Bay, and to the rail link from Witbank to Richards Bay for coal export.

Social Welfare

Social welfare services protect the old, the blind, the war disabled, the unemployed and those injured at work. Medical services are administered by the Provinces. These reach a high standard although there is considerable disparity between health facilities available to whites and non-whites; in 1981 there was one bed for every 61 whites, one for every 337 Africans and one for every 505 Asians. In 1979 there were 514 hospitals, with 99,178 beds, and 5,598 physicians.

Education

For Europeans, schooling is compulsory from seven to sixteen in English-medium or Afrikaans-medium schools; for Coloureds it is compulsory from seven to sixteen in Natal and seven to fourteen in the Cape Province where possible; for Asians attendance is compulsory where possible. In 1970 there were fewer than 10,000 African, Coloured and Asian graduates. Although in 1980 about 3 million Africans were at primary school, about half leave before their fifth year. In 1976 schooling was made compulsory for all Africans between the ages of 7 and 11. Africans' education is in English and their own languages and the curriculum is limited. Segregation is enforced by the Government in all universities though a few non-white individuals attend specialized courses at "white" universities. The Government is committed to equality in education, but in 1980 expenditure per European pupil was 10 times that for an African.

Tourism

Tourism is an important industry and there were 702,800 visitors to South Africa in 1980. South Africa's attractions are the climate, the scenery and wild-life. The great game reserves, of which the Kruger National Park is the largest, attract thousands of visitors from Europe, America and Africa.

Public Holidays

1982: May 20th (Ascension), May 31st (Republic Day), September 6th (Settlers' Day), October 11th (for Kruger Day), December 16th (Day of the Covenant), December 25th-27th (Christmas).

1983: January 1st (New Year's Day), April 1st-4th (Easter).

Weights and Measures

The metric system is in use.

Currency and Exchange Rates

100 cents = 1 rand (R).

Exchange rates (December 1981):

£1 sterling = 1.8775 rand;

FINANCE

100 cents = 1 rand (R).

Coins: ½, 1, 2, 5, 10, 20, 50 cents and 1 rand.

Notes: 2, 5, 10 and 20 rand.

Exchange rates (December 1981): £1 sterling = 1.8775 rand; U.S. $1 = 97.6 S.A. cents.

100 rand = £53.26 = $102.46.

Note: The rand was introduced in February 1961, replacing the South African pound (at par with the pound sterling) at the rate of £1 = 2 rand. From September 1949 the pound had been valued at U.S. $2.80, so the initial value of the rand was $1.40 (£1 = 71.43 South African cents). This valuation remained in effect until August 1971. Since December 1971 the exchange rate has been frequently adjusted. It was U.S. $1 = 75 South African cents (1 rand = $1.333) from December 1971 to June 1972; $1 = 78.29 S.A. cents (1 rand = $1.277) from October 1972 to February 1973; $1 = 70.46 S.A. cents (1 rand = $1.419) from February to June 1973; and 1 rand = $1.49 (£1 = 67.114 S.A. cents) from June 1973 to June 1974. In terms of sterling the rand was valued at 11s. 8d. or 58.33p (£1 = 1.714 rand) from November 1967 to August 1971; and at 51.17p (£1 = 1.954 rand) from December 1971 to June 1972. From June 1974 to June 1975 the South African authorities had an exchange rate policy of "independent managed floating", with frequent small adjustments made to the buying and selling rates. The rand was devalued from $1.47 to $1.40 in June 1975, and further devalued to $1.15 in September 1975. It remained at this level until February 1979, since when the currency has been subject to a "managed float". The average market value of the rand was $1.444 in 1973; $1.472 in 1974; $1.366 in 1975; $1.188 in 1979; $1.285 in 1980.

THE CONSTITUTION

(Republican Constitution, 1961, subsequently amended)

Executive Power

Executive power is vested in a State President, acting on the advice of the Executive Council or Cabinet, composed of a Prime Minister and 19 other Ministers. The President is elected by an electoral college of members of the House of Assembly, presided over by the Chief Justice or a Judge of Appeal. He holds office for a 7-year term and is not eligible for re-election unless "it is expressly otherwise decided" by the electoral college. He is Head of State and Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces. The Ministers are members of the Executive Council and they are appointed to administer such departments of State as are established by the State President-in-Council. Deputy Ministers, not exceeding six in number, may be appointed by the State President to assist Ministers in the administration of departments of State. Deputy Ministers are not members of the Executive Council.

Parliament

The Parliament of the Republic consists of the State President and a House of Assembly. The State President has power to summon and prorogue Parliament and may dissolve the House of Assembly. There must be a session of Parliament at least every twelve months.

The House of Assembly

Members of the House of Assembly must be white citizens, must be registered voters and resident for at least five years in the Republic. The House of Assembly continues for five years unless previously dissolved.

All white citizens over the age of 18 are entitled to vote, except those who have been convicted of treason, murder, or any other offence punishable by a term of imprisonment without option of a fine.

The House consists of 165 white members directly elected to represent the electoral divisions of the Republic, plus 20 members nominated in proportion to the position of parties in the Assembly.

Representation of Indians

In terms of the South African Indian Council Act, 1968, as amended, there is a South African Indian Council consisting of 15 appointed and 15 elected members. Only Indians may be members of the Council. The elected members are elected by elected members of local authority, local affairs, management or consultative committees and other local authorities consisting of the Indian group. Ten of the elected members represent Natal, four the Transvaal and one the Cape Province. The appointed members are appointed by the Minister of Indian Affairs to represent the various provinces.

There is an executive committee of the Council consisting of five members of the Council of whom one member is appointed by the Minister of Indian Affairs and designated the chairman of the committee. The remaining four members are elected by the Council. The Council acts in an advisory capacity and the executive committee deals with education, community welfare and other matters which the State President, the Minister of Indian Affairs or an executive committee of a province may delegate to it.

Representation of Blacks

Blacks within the Republic of South Africa are represented in their own homeland governments established for various national units. The Bantu Authorities Act, 1951, provides for tribal, regional and territorial authorities, which have matters such as educational institutions, roads and hospitals under their control.

The Promotion of Bantu Self-Government Act, 1959, established eight national units in respect of the black population and provided for the appointment of commissioners-general to serve as links between the national units and the Central Government, as well as for black persons to represent national units in urban areas for blacks in white areas.

The Transkei Constitution Act, 1963, provided for self-government for the Xhosa national unit with a Cabinet presided over by a Chief Minister elected by a Legislative Assembly. In 1976 the Transkei was declared independent within the terms of the Status of the Transkei Act, 1976.

The Bantu Homelands Constitution Act, 1971, empowers the State President to promulgate constitutions for any Bantu area for which a territorial authority has been established. Territorial authorities are disestablished when executive councils (Cabinets) are constituted for such areas. Apart from the Transkei, eight constitutions have been promulgated for Bantu homelands in the Republic and three of these, Bophuthatswana, Venda and Ciskei, have been declared independent.

Procedure

The State President may assent to, or withhold assent from, a Bill. Two copies of every law, one in English and one in Afrikaans, are to be enrolled on record in the office of the Registrar of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court of South Africa. In case of conflict between the two copies, that signed by the State President shall prevail.

Provincial Government

Provision is made for the appointment of an administrator in each province, who holds office for a term of five years. In each province there is also a provincial council consisting of the same number of members as are elected in the province for the House of Assembly, but in any province which has fewer than 20 representatives in the House of Assembly, the provincial council consists of twice as many members as the number of representatives it has in the House of Assembly. A member of a provincial council ceases to be a member on being elected to the House of Assembly. The powers of the provinces, which relate chiefly to the administration of local affairs (mainly roads, hospitals and education) are subordinate to the powers of the Central Parliament and all provincial ordinances require the consent of the State President-in-Council.

An executive committee of four persons, not necessarily members of the council, together with the administrator as chairman, is elected by the provincial council at its first meeting after each general election. This committee carries on the administration of affairs on behalf of the provincial council. The administrator must act on behalf of the State President-in-Council in regard to all matters in respect of which no powers are reserved or delegated to the provincial council.

President's Council

A President's Council to examine possible constitutional changes came into being on January 1st, 1981. It consists of 60 European, Coloured, Indian and Chinese members, but no Africans, and is chaired by the Vice-President of the Republic. There are five permanent committees dealing with planning, finance, relations, constitutional and scientific matters.

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

The common law of the Republic of South Africa is the Roman-Dutch law, the uncodified law of Holland as it was at the time of the secession of the Cape in 1806. The law of England is not recognized as authoritative, though the principles of English law have been introduced in relation to civil and criminal procedure, evidence and mercantile matters. In all other matters, however, Roman-Dutch law prevails.

The Supreme Court consists of an Appellate Division; three Provisional Divisions and one Local Division in the Cape Province, one Provincial and one Local Division in each of the provinces of the Transvaal and Natal and one Provincial Division in the Orange Free State and Namibia (South West Africa). Except for the fact that the local divisions in the Transvaal and Natal have no jurisdiction to hear appeals, they exercise within limited areas the same jurisdiction as Provincial Divisions.

The provinces are further divided into districts and regions with Magistrates' Courts, whose criminal and civil jurisdiction is clearly defined. From these courts appeals may be taken to the Provincial and Local Divisions of the Supreme Court, and thence to the Appellate Division.

THE PRESS

The Press in South Africa is extremely vigorous, and an outspoken section of it supports the opposition. The English-language newspapers have considerable freedom of expression but in October 1974, the Newspaper Press Union amended its code of conduct under strong government pressure and empowered the South African Press Council to fine newspaper editors up to R10,000 if they infringed it. The new amendments related to security matters and stirring up of inter-racial feeling, and were strongly criticized for their vagueness by some editors.

Under the Publications Act of 1974 the Publications Control Board had its powers extended, and appeal to the courts against its decisions was removed. This tightened still further the censorship prevailing in South Africa particularly regarding reading material and the cinema. The Newspaper Press Union members were exempted from the provisions of the Act.

In March 1977 the Government agreed to withdraw a Bill which would have established a statutory Press code enforced by a Press council. After the "Muldergate" scandal stricter press controls were again proposed. However, on June 14th, 1979, the Prime Minister, Mr. P. W. Botha, announced that the plans had been dropped "for the present".

FINANCE

(cap. = capital; p.u. = paid up; res. = reserves; dep. = deposits; m. = million; R = Rand)

BANKING

In May 1973 the Government announced plans for increased local shareholdings in banks over the next ten years though these have since been considerably modified. In November 1973 the Minister of Finance said that though foreign-controlled banks would be required to reduce foreign shareholdings in them to 50 per cent by 1983, they would no longer be forced to reduce them further to 10 per cent.

TRADE UNIONS

All workers in South Africa enjoy full freedom of association. At present, certain legislative restrictions remain as to the racial composition of trade unions, but an increasing number of unions operate, by ministerial exemption, on a non-racial basis. Trade unions which register with the Department of Manpower enjoy certain benefits, principally that of full participation in all industrial relations structures and procedures as set out in the Labour Relations Act. However, many black unions remain unregistered, and these are not illegal. In May 1981 there were 195 registered and about 20 unregistered unions. There are four major groupings of trade unions and, in addition, a sizeable number of unions with no affiliation. Total membership of unaffiliated unions was over 300,000 in 1981.

ATOMIC ENERGY

South Africa was one of the first members of the International Atomic Energy Agency, but was expelled in June 1977. Construction work is proceeding on the country's first nuclear power station, Koeberg, at Duynefontein in the Western Cape. Two pressurized water reactors of 921 MW each were due to come on stream in 1982/83. The pilot uranium enrichment plant at Valindaba, near Pretoria, is being extended into a production plant, but will not produce sufficient uranium to fuel the Koeberg reactors until the mid-1980s. Production of enriched uranium was confirmed in April 1981 and, later that year, the French contractors building Koeberg announced that sufficient enriched uranium had been acquired for the first core-loading of the reactors. South Africa had not signed the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty by early 1982.

Atomic Energy Board: Private Bag X256, Pretoria 0001; f. 1948; 12 mems.; exercises control over all radioactive materials and licenses all nuclear installations in South Africa. THE BANTU HOMELANDS

The Bantu Self-Government Act, 1959, accepts the natural division of the African population into eight national units. The Transkei Territorial Authority was set up in 1962 and it received limited internal "self-government" in 1963, this being the next step to independence which the South African Government has promised the homelands. In 1971 the Bantu Homelands Constitutional Bill empowered the South African Government to grant self-government, on a similar basis to that already granted to the Transkei, to any African area which had a Territorial Authority, at its request. Bophuthatswana (June 1972), the Ciskei (August 1972), Lebowa (October 1972), Gazankulu (February 1973), Venda (February 1973), KwaZulu (April 1973), Qwaqwa (November 1974) and KaNgwane (April 1981) have since been granted "self-government". By February 1982 only KwaNdebele had not been granted self-government. Transkei was declared independent in October 1976, Bophuthatswana in December 1977, Venda in September 1979 and Ciskei in December 1981. However, Chief Gatsha Buthelezi of KwaZulu has strongly opposed the homelands policy and called for majority rule in South Africa.

BOPHUTHATSWANA

The Republic of Bophuthatswana was declared independent by South Africa on December 6th, 1977. This independence has not been recognized by any government other than the South African Government, nor by the United Nations, and by February 1982 South Africa was the only country to have diplomatic links with Bophuthatswana.

Bophuthatswana consists of seven scattered land-locked blocks surrounded by South Africa and Botswana. The administration is seeking to consolidate the territory and in September 1980 the town of Mafikeng (formerly Mafeking) was incorporated into Bophuthatswana, at the cost to the South African Government of an estimated R3 million in compensation to European inhabitants. At independence the total area of the territory was 40,330 sq. km. (15,571 sq. miles). The population is predominantly Setswana-speaking but there are important Pedi, Changana, Xhosa, South Sotho and Zulu minorities. The flag consists of a red diagonal stripe on a blue ground with a leopard's head in the upper left-hand corner. Montshiwa is the temporary seat of government pending the construction of a new capital at Mmabatho.

Under the provisions of the independence Constitution executive power resides in the President, who is appointed by the Legislative Assembly. The President acts on the advice of an Executive Council appointed by him, of not more than 12 members. There is a unicameral Legislative Assembly of 96 members, of whom 48 were appointed by the regional authorities prior to independence and 48 were returned in a general election held in August 1977. A second-tier system of local government provides for 76 tribal and six community authorities represented in 12 regional authorities.

Under the Status of Bophuthatswana Act 1977, South Africa deprived all residents of the territory of South African citizenship, including two-thirds of the population living outside the territorial boundaries. The ruling Bophuthatswana Democratic Party, which opposed this legislation and seeks territorial consolidation, holds 90 seats in the Legislative Assembly. The majority of the inhabitants are dependent on mining and agriculture, although only 6.6 per cent of the land area is arable. Small industries are being established, but wage levels are lower than in South Africa, to which approximately 150,000 residents travel daily to work. Bophuthatswana relies heavily on the South African Government for financial assistance, which totalled R585 million between 1977 and 1981.

CISKEI

The Republic of Ciskei was granted independence by South Africa on December 4th, 1981, but (as with Transkei, Bophuthatswana and Venda) failed to gain recognition from any government other than South Africa's. Ciskeian independence was also opposed by the Transkei Government as it divided the Xhosa people of Ciskei and Transkei.

Ciskei is a small wedge-shaped territory of 8,500 sq. km. (3,280 sq. miles) in the Eastern Cape, close to the western border of Transkei. The two homelands are divided by a narrow strip of land containing the towns of East London and King William's Town, where many of the inhabitants of Ciskei work. The Van der Walt Commission on Bantustan land consolidated recommended that King William's Town be included in Ciskei, but the South African Government ignored the advice after a referendum among the town's white voters had overwhelmingly rejected cession. A new capital for Ciskei is being built at Bisho. The population of Ciskei at independence was about 660,000, but a further 1,400,000 Africans were deprived of South African citizenship and declared Ciskei nationals, although permanently resident in the Republic of South Africa. Ciskei's national flag is a white diagonal band with a symbolic crane superimposed on a blue background. The official languages are Xhosa and English.

Economically, Ciskei is very poor and relies on the earnings of migrant labourers in South Africa for 65 per cent of its national income. At independence South Africa provided 77 per cent of the Ciskei Government's revenue in direct aid. The dry climate makes agriculture difficult and Ciskei is not self-sufficient in food, although pineapples are grown quite successfully. The Ciskeian National Development Corporation encourages industrial growth, the main centre being at Dimbaza. There are also small industrial complexes at Mdantsane and Zwelitsha.

TRANSKEI

The Republic of Transkei was declared independent by the Republic of South Africa on October 26th, 1976. To the best of our knowledge no internationally recognized country other than the Republic of South Africa has yet recognized its independence by establishing diplomatic relations with it. Whenever the Iriphabliki Yetranskei is successful in securing such international recognition, the facts will, of course, be recorded in future editions of this book—Ed.

At independence, the 1.5 million people of Transkei living in South Africa were declared Transkei nationals by the South African Government and, although deprived of South African citizenship, were still subject to pass laws and other discriminatory legislation. The main land area of Transkei, with its Indian Ocean coastline, is bordered by South Africa's Cape and Natal Provinces, except at its northernmost extremity where it borders south-eastern Lesotho. Two small sections lie separated to the west and north-east.

Transkei's territorial claim against South Africa for East Griqualand, and a desire for international credibility, led to the severing of diplomatic relations with South Africa in April 1978. However, after experiencing severe economic difficulties Transkei renewed relations in February 1980. Numerous African political and religious organizations have been banned, and President Kaiser Matanzima declared a state of emergency in June 1980 during a spate of unrest among school pupils. Following general elections held in September 1981, at which the ruling Transkei National Independence Party won all but one of the 75 elected seats, President Kaiser Matanzima announced that he planned to retire in February 1982.

1977/78: Expenditure R239 million.

1978/79: Estimated revenue R225.4m.; estimated expenditure R328m. (Dept. of Works and energy R60.9m.; Education R55.5m.; Dept. of the Interior R40m.; Agriculture and forestry R39.7m.).

1979/80: Estimated expenditure R253.4 million.

1980/81: Estimated expenditure R325.5 million (Education R77.5 million; Dept. of the Interior R44m.).

THE CONSTITUTION

The independence Constitution provides for Umtata to be the seat of government. Executive power resides in the President, elected by the National Assembly for a seven-year term. He acts on the advice of an executive council, appointed by the President, of not more than 15 ministers. All powers, authorities and functions of the President of South Africa have been transferred to the President of Transkei, although certain matters (such as those relating to defence and customs and excise) are administered jointly with South Africa.

There is a unicameral parliament of 75 chiefs and paramount chiefs, who are co-opted by their peers, and 75 members who are elected for five years by universal suffrage of all Transkeian citizens aged 21 or over.

The National Assembly has repealed about 100 South African Acts, including the 1950 Group Areas Act, the 1953 Reservation of Separate Amenities Act and the 1964 Coloured Persons' Representative Council Act.

All citizens and residents of Transkei are "assured of social, political and economic justice, freedom of speech, assembly and worship and unimpeded access to, and equality before, the law". (However, in 1977 legislation was introduced making it a capital offence to criticize Transkeian sovereignty or the officers of state.) Africans of Xhosa origin living outside Transkei are given the option of becoming citizens.

The official language is Xhosa, although Sesotho, Afrikaans and English are used for judicial, legislative and administrative purposes.

South African Airways also serves Transkei.

VENDA

The Republic of Venda was declared independent by South Africa on September 13th, 1979. As with Bophuthatswana and Transkei, international recognition was not forthcoming and the UN Security Council issued a statement on September 21st condemning the "so-called independence of Venda" as "totally invalid".

Venda consists of two linked land masses in the north-east corner of the Transvaal with a total area of 6,500 sq. km. (2,510 square miles), subject to further territorial consolidation. A narrow strip of land to the north separates Venda from the Limpopo River, the southernmost boundary of Zimbabwe. The population consists of a multiplicity of related tribal groups, but all speak the same language, Luvenda, which is one of the three official languages along with English and Afrikaans. The capital is Thohoyandou. The Status of Venda Act, which passed its final stages in the South African Parliament on June 21st, 1979, contains citizenship provisions similar to those adopted when Transkei and Bophuthatswana were granted independence. Some 500,000 Vhavenda became citizens of the new state, about 170,000 of whom live permanently outside the territorial boundaries. Nearly 70 per cent of Venda's male labour force work within the Republic of South Africa.

Domestic economic activity consists mainly of agriculture and forestry, although the Government is promoting agro-industries and small business. Important deposits of coal have been found in the west and north-east which are to be exploited by the Iron and Steel Industrial Corporation of South Africa (ISCOR). The soil is fertile and rainfall plentiful, and cattle ranching and the production of subtropical fruit are areas of high economic potential.

THE CONSTITUTION

Under the terms of the independence Constitution, which came into effect on September 13th, 1979, executive power is vested in the President, who is Head of State and Commander-in-Chief of the National Force. The President is elected by the members of the National Assembly and holds office for a period not exceeding the five-year life of the Assembly, after which he becomes subject to re-election. The Assembly may be dissolved by the President at any time. The President appoints an Executive Council of up to nine Ministers of State who must all be members of the National Assembly.

The unicameral Assembly normally consists of 42 members elected by popular vote, 3 presidential appointees, 28 mahosi (chiefs) and 15 members designated by Venda's four regional councils. All existing tribal, community and regional authorities, such as those of the chiefs and headmen, are retained with their traditional status and powers under the Constitution.

SRI LANKA

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Democratic Socialist Republic of Sri Lanka lies 80 km. east of the southern tip of India. The climate is tropical, average temperature 26°C (80°F); the south-west around Colombo receives heavy monsoon rains. Sinhala and Tamil are both recognized national languages. The official language, Sinhala, is spoken by over 70 per cent of the people. Nearly 70 per cent of the population are Buddhist, about 15 per cent are Tamil-speaking Hindus and there are important Christian (mostly Roman Catholic) and Muslim minorities. The national flag (proportions 35 by 18) is dark crimson with a yellow border, in each corner of which a Bo leaf is depicted. In the centre is a gold lion and at the left are two vertical stripes of green and orange. The capital is Colombo.

Recent History

Sri Lanka, known as Ceylon until 1972, gained its independence from the United Kingdom in February 1948. From then until 1956, for a brief period in 1960 and from 1965 to 1970 the country was ruled, latterly in coalition, by the United National Party (UNP), which was concerned to protect the rights of the Tamils. The socialist Sri Lanka Freedom Party (SLFP), formed in 1951 by Solomon Bandaranaike, emphasized the national heritage, winning the support of groups that advocated the recognition of Sinhala as the official language and the establishment of Buddhism as the predominant religion. The SLFP won the 1956 elections decisively and remained in power, except for a three-month interruption in 1960, until 1965, having formed a coalition government with the Trotskyist Lanka Sama Samaj Party (LSSP) in 1964. Following the assassination of Solomon Bandaranaike in 1959, his widow, Sirimavo Bandaranaike, took over the leadership of the SLFP which at the 1970 elections became the leading partner of a United Front coalition government with the LSSP and the Communist Party (Moscow Wing).

In 1971 the United Front Government suppressed an uprising led by the left-wing Janatha Vimukti Peramuna (People's Liberation Front). A state of emergency was declared and the party was banned. A new People's Liberation Front emerged, led by Mahinda Wijesekera. In 1976 the main Tamil party, the Federal Party, and other Tamil groups formed the Tamil United Liberation Front (TULF), calling for a separate Tamil state (Eelam) in the northern and eastern parts of the country.

In December 1976 the Communists supported strikes of transport unions which were initiated by the UNP and the LSSP (which had been expelled from the coalition in 1975). The strikes ended in January 1977, and in February Mrs. Bandaranaike prorogued Parliament until May 19th. Several members of the SLFP resigned and seven members of the Communist Party left the coalition government, forming an independent group within the Opposition. The state of emergency was lifted in February 1977 and general elections were held in July, accompanied by widespread violence. The UNP won the elections with an overwhelming majority and Junius Jayawardene became Prime Minister. In August riots broke out between the Sinhalese majority and the Tamil minority, and the TULF, which had become the main opposition party, increased its demands for an independent Tamil state. In October a constitutional amendment was passed to establish a presidential system of government and in February 1978 Jayawardene became the country's first executive President.

Continued violence and pressure from the Tamils during 1978 led the Government to make some concessions, such as the recognition of the Tamil language, in the new Constitution of the Democratic Socialist Republic of Sri Lanka in September 1978. In view of this, the Ceylon Workers' Congress joined the Government, but the TULF remained undecided, mainly for fear of reprisals by Tamil extremists. Continuing violence prompted the declaration of a state of emergency in July 1979 in Jaffna, where the Tamils are in a majority. At the same time severe anti-terrorist legislation was passed in Parliament and a presidential Commission was set up to study the Tamil problem.

In June 1980 a general strike, called by left-wing trade unions in a bid for higher wages, led to the declaration of a state of emergency between July and August, and over 40,000 government workers lost their jobs.

In August 1980 the TULF agreed to the establishment of District Development Councils, providing for a wide measure of regional autonomy. Elections to these, held in June 1981, were boycotted by the SLFP, the LSSP and the Communist Party, and the UNP won control of 18 of the 24 Councils. Subsequent communal disturbances between Sinhalese and Tamils led to the imposition of a state of emergency in the North for five days in June and throughout the country from August 1981 to January 1982. Tamil M.P.s proposed a motion of "no confidence" in the Government and subsequently boycotted Parliament until November 1981, when a peace initiative to ease racial tension was proposed by the Government.

In October 1980 the former Prime Minister, Mrs. Bandaranaike, was found guilty of having abused power by a special presidential commission, which deprived her of all civic rights and effectively prevented her from standing in the next elections. During 1981 family disputes within the SLFP culminated in December with Mrs. Bandaranaike dismissing from the party her son, Anura, and several leading members, who formed a breakaway group.

In foreign policy Sri Lanka has adopted a non-aligned role. Negotiations have been held with India since 1964 on the repatriation of stateless Tamils of Indian origin. India was to accept 600,000 people and Sri Lanka was to grant citizenship to the remaining 400,000, but by November 1981 half of this number still remained to be settled.

Government

A presidential form of Government was adopted in October 1977 and confirmed in the Constitution of September 1978 which allows for a unicameral Parliament as the supreme legislative body, its members being elected by a system of modified proportional representation. Executive powers are vested in the President, who is Head of State. He is directly elected for a term of six years, but he is not accountable to Parliament. He has the power to appoint or dismiss the Prime Minister and members of the Cabinet and may assume any portfolio. He is empowered to dismiss Parliament.

Sri Lanka comprises 24 administrative districts, each with an appointed Governor and an elected Development Council.

Defence

In July 1981 the armed forces totalled 14,840: army 10,000, navy 2,740, air force 2,100. Defence expenditure for 1980 was 984.4 million rupees. Military service is voluntary.

Economic Affairs

The predominantly rural population is concentrated in the wet south and south-west zones, where rubber, tea and coconuts are grown. Company-owned tea estates, both foreign and domestic, were nationalized in 1975 and the production since then has never equalled the record harvest of 228,000 metric tons in 1965, mainly because of mismanagement, a slow replanting rate and a shortage of workers. Even so, Sri Lanka became the world's largest exporter of tea in 1978, when tea and rubber (plantation crops) and coconut (a smallholders' crop) accounted for 70 per cent of export earnings. In 1980, however, the output of plantation agriculture fell by 10.1 per cent: tea production declined by 7 per cent, rubber by 13 per cent and coconuts by 15 per cent. Paddy rice production, however, increased markedly by 11 per cent over 1979 to reach 2,130,000 tons. Rice is the staple diet and the People's Republic of China was the main supplier for 27 years, but three record harvests meant that no rice was imported from China in 1979.

The Mahaveli Development Project has improved irrigation and, when it is completed in the mid-1980s, will provide hydroelectric power for the whole island. The £150 million Victoria Dam project, started in March 1980, aims to provide irrigation for some 100,000 acres of land.

The only commercially important mineral is graphite, although there are also deposits of iron ore, monazite, ilmenite sands, limestone, clay and kaolin, and uranium deposits were discovered in coastal areas in 1980. Export earnings of gems rose from Rs. 16 million in 1972 to an estimated Rs. 460 million in 1980. Inshore and off-shore petroleum exploration, begun in 1975, has not been successful, but contracts were signed with a group of international oil companies in 1980 to resume the search for off-shore oil.

The public sector industries, which include cement, textiles, petroleum and fertilizers, are undertaken by state-sponsored corporations, and supply primarily the domestic market. Export earnings from industrial products increased from 1971 and the record reached in 1977 was almost doubled in 1978, but registered only a 1.4 per cent increase in 1979.

Sri Lanka's principal trading partners in 1979 were the U.S.A., the United Kingdom and Japan. Foreign aid for development projects has come from Middle East countries, Japan, the Netherlands, the U.S.S.R., the Federal Republic of Germany, the U.S.A., the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and Yugoslavia.

Unemployment, which reached 1.5 million in 1979 (one third of the work-force), and inflation are the country's main economic problems. G.D.P. grew by 5.8 per cent in 1980, compared with 6.3 per cent in 1979 and 8.2 per cent in 1978. The fall in growth was largely because import prices rose faster than exports, and the annual rate of inflation nearly doubled to 31 per cent in 1980. Huge increases in investment spending by government ministries led to a doubling of the total fiscal deficit to over 21 per cent of G.D.P. in 1980. After the IMF temporarily suspended disbursement of a $335 million loan, drastic cuts in government spending were imposed in the 1981 budget, and it was agreed that no new projects would be sanctioned for 1981 and 1982.

A 500-acre Investment Promotion Zone (IPZ) has been set up north of Colombo, attracting much-needed foreign capital and creating employment.

Transport and Communications

Central Sri Lanka is hilly and thickly wooded, but good road and rail links make most parts of the island accessible. The railways are state-owned with over 1,500 km. of track. Air Lanka provides domestic and international flights. The port of Colombo is one of the most important in the Far East, and container facilities are being installed with Japanese aid.

Social Welfare

There is an island network of hospitals, clinics and dispensaries where treatment is free. There were 347 hospitals in 1976, with 39,838 beds. In 1976 there were 2,248 doctors registered with the Department of Health. Unemployment benefits were introduced in 1977. In 1980 Sri Lanka became the first South-East Asian country to adopt a regional health charter.

Education

Education is compulsory between the ages of 5 and 14 and free from lower kindergarten to university age. There are three types of school: state-controlled schools (mostly co-educational), denominational schools and Pirivenas (for Buddhist clergy and lay students). There are also 26 teacher-training colleges, six universities and two university colleges. Since 1977 there has been increased emphasis on informal education programmes for school leavers and special education programmes. There are also 13 polytechnic institutes, eight junior technical colleges and an open university. Adult illiteracy, which in 1963 averaged 24.5 per cent (males 14.4 per cent, females 35.9 per cent), had reportedly fallen to 15 per cent by 1979.

Tourism

As a stopping place for luxury cruises and by virtue of the spectacle of its Buddhist festivals, ancient monuments and natural scenery, Sri Lanka is one of Asia's most important tourist centres. Good motor roads connect Colombo to the main places of interest.

In 1980 there were an estimated 321,780 visitors to Sri Lanka.

Public Holidays

1982: May 1st (May Day), May 7th (Wesak Full Moon holiday), May 22nd (National Heroes Day), June 6th (Poson Poya Day), June 30th (Bank Holiday), July 5th (Esala Poya Day), July 23rd (Ramazan Festival Day), August 4th (Nikini Poya Day), September 2nd (Binara Poya Day), September 29th (Hadji Festival Day), October 2nd (Vap Poya Day), November 1st (Poya Day), November 14th (Deepavali), November 30th (Unduvap Poya Day), December 25th (Christmas), December 28th (Milad-un-Nabi, Birth of the Prophet).

1983: January (Tamil Thai Pongal Day, Durutu Poya Day), February (Navam Poya Day), February 4th (Independence Commemoration Day), March (Maha Sivaratri, Medin Poya Day), April (Sinhala and Tamil New Year, Bak Poya Day), April 1st (Good Friday).

There is a holiday every lunar month on the day of the full moon.

Note: A number of Hindu, Muslim and Buddhist holidays depend on lunar sightings.

Weights and Measures

Legislation in November 1974 provided for the introduction of the metric system but imperial units are still used for some purposes.

Currency and Exchange Rates

100 cents = 1 Sri Lanka rupee.

Exchange rates (December 1981):

£1 sterling = 39.34 rupees;

U.S. $1 = 20.45 rupees.

FINANCE

100 cents = 1 Sri Lanka rupee.

Coins: 1, 2, 5, 10, 25 and 50 cents; 1 and 2 rupees.

Notes: 2, 5, 10, 20, 50 and 100 rupees.

Exchange rates (December 1981): £1 sterling = 39.34 rupees; U.S. $1 = 20.45 rupees.

1,000 Sri Lanka rupees = £25.42 = $48.90.

Note: Between September 1949 and November 1967 the Ceylon (now Sri Lanka) rupee was valued at 21 U.S. cents (U.S. $1 = 4.7619 rupees). In November 1967 the rupee was devalued by 20 per cent to 16.8 U.S. cents ($1 = 5.9524 rupees) and this valuation remained in effect until August 1971 and from November 1971 to July 1972. In terms of sterling, the exchange rate was £1 = 14.286 rupees from November 1967 to November 1971; and £1 = 15.510 rupees from December 1971 to June 1972. In 1968 a second rate was established, at a large premium over the official rate, through a system of "foreign exchange entitlement certificates" for certain exports and other earners of foreign exchange. From July 1972 to May 1976 the Sri Lanka authorities maintained an official exchange rate against sterling at a mid-point of £1 = 15.60 rupees, thus allowing the rupee's value to fluctuate against other currencies in line with sterling ("floating" since June 1972). In May 1976 the direct link with sterling was ended and the rupee's value has since been determined in relation to a weighted "basket" of currencies of Sri Lanka's trading partners. In November 1977 the two-tier exchange rate system was ended and since then the rupee has been "floating". The average market rate (rupees per U.S. dollar) was 6.405 in 1973; 6.649 in 1974; 7.050 in 1975; 8.459 in 1976; 9.153 in 1977; 15.608 in 1978; 15.569 in 1979; 16.534 in 1980.

THE CONSTITUTION

(Summary)

The Constitution of the Democratic Socialist Republic of Sri Lanka was approved by the National Assembly on August 17th, 1978, and promulgated on September 7th, 1978.

FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS

The Constitution guarantees the fundamental rights and freedoms of all citizens, including freedom of thought, conscience and worship and equal entitlement before the law.

THE PRESIDENT

The President is Head of State. He exercises all executive powers including defence of the Republic. He is directly elected by the people for a term of six years, and is eligible for re-election. The President's powers include the right to:

- (a) choose to hold any portfolio in the Cabinet;
- (b) appoint or dismiss the Prime Minister or any other minister;
- (c) preside at ceremonial sittings of Parliament;
- (d) dismiss Parliament at will;
- (e) submit to a national referendum any Bill or matter of national importance which has been rejected by Parliament.

LEGISLATURE

The Parliament is the legislative power of the people. It consists of such number of representatives of the people as a Delimitation Commission shall determine. The members of Parliament are directly elected by a system of modified proportional representation. By-elections are abolished, successors to members of Parliament being appointed by the head of the party which nominated the outgoing member at the previous election. Parliament exercises the judicial power of the people through courts, tribunals and institutions created and established or recognized by the Constitution or established or recognized by the Constitution or established by law. Parliament has control over public finance.

OTHER PROVISIONS

Religion. Buddhism has the foremost place among religions and it is the duty of the State to protect and foster Buddhism, whilst assuring every citizen the freedom to adopt the religion of their choice.

Language. The Constitution recognizes two national languages, Sinhala and Tamil. Sinhala remains the official language and all laws must be made or enacted in this language. Either of the national languages may be used by all citizens in transactions with government institutions.

Amendments to the Constitution require a two-thirds majority in Parliament. In February 1979 the Constitution was amended by allowing Members of Parliament who resigned or were expelled from their party to retain their seats, in certain circumstances. In January 1981 Parliament amended the Constitution to increase its membership from 168 to 169.

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

Chief Justice: Hon. NEVILLE D. M. SAMARAKOON, Q.C.

The judicial system consists of the Supreme Court, the Court of Appeal, the High Court, District Courts, Magistrates' Courts, Family Courts and Primary Courts. The last five are Courts of the First Instance and appeals lie from them to the Court of Appeal and from there, on a question of law, to the Supreme Court. Appeals also lie from the Court of Appeal if special leave is granted by the Supreme Court. The High Court deals with all criminal cases and the District Courts with civil cases. There are also Labour Tribunals to decide labour disputes.

The Judicial Service Commission consists of the Chief Justice and two judges of the Supreme Court, nominated by the President. All judges of the Courts of First Instance (except High Court Judges) and the staff of all courts are appointed and controlled by the Judicial Service Commission. The Supreme Court consists of the Chief Justice and not fewer than six and not more than ten other judges. The Court of Appeal consists of the President and not fewer than six and not more than eleven other judges.

SUDAN

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Democratic Republic of Sudan lies in north-east Africa. To the north is Egypt, to the east is Ethiopia and the Red Sea, to the west the Central African Republic, Chad and Libya, and to the south Kenya, Uganda and Zaire. The climate shows a marked transition from the desert of the north to the rainy equatorial south. Temperatures vary with height and latitude. The overall average is about 21°C (70°F). Arabic is the official language, although other dialects are spoken and English is widely understood. Most northern Sudanese are Muslims, while in the south most are animists or Christians. The national flag has three horizontal stripes of red, white and black, with a green triangle at the hoist. The capital is Khartoum.

Recent History

The Sudan (as the country was known before 1975) was ruled as an Anglo-Egyptian condominium from 1899 until achieving independence as a parliamentary republic on January 1st, 1956. After a military coup in November 1958 the army took control of the state. A Supreme Council of the Armed Forces was set up and ruled until October 1964, when it was overthrown in a civilian revolution. The Governments which followed failed to improve the economic situation or to deal with the problem of the southern provinces, and in May 1969 power was seized by a group of officers led by Col. (later Field Marshal) Gaafar Mohammed Nimeri. All existing political institutions and organizations were abolished and the "Democratic Republic of the Sudan" was proclaimed with supreme authority in the hands of the Revolutionary Command Council. A more militant policy towards Israel was adopted and co-ordination committees with Egypt and Libya were established. In November 1970 the Presidents of Egypt and Libya and President Nimeri agreed in principle to political union between their countries, but internal opposition to Nimeri prevented Sudanese participation in the Federation of Arab Republics which was formed in January 1972 with Syria as the third member.

In July 1971 a section of the army, led by Communists, overthrew the Government. However, President Nimeri regained power in a counter-coup three days after being ousted and a massive purge of Communists followed.

In a referendum held in October 1971 to confirm Gen. Nimeri's nomination as President, there were almost four million votes in favour and only 56,000 against. A new Government was formed, the Revolutionary Command Council was dissolved and the Sudanese Socialist Union (SSU) was recognized as the only political party.

Since first coming to power, the Nimeri Government had made attempts to settle the problem of the three southern provinces (Bahr el Ghazal, Equatoria and Upper Nile), which are racially and culturally different from most of the country. Rebellion against rule from the north had first broken out in 1955 and fighting continued until March 1972, when an agreement to give the three provinces a certain degree of autonomy was concluded between members of the Sudan Government and representatives of the South Sudan Liberation Movement. A permanent executive Council for the southern region was established in April 1972 and Sudan's permanent constitution was endorsed in April 1973. Elections to the Regional People's Assembly for Southern Sudan took place in November 1973 and for the National People's Assembly in April 1974.

The establishment of a National Assembly and a political party broadened the Government's base of power, though the army continues to play an important role in the country's affairs. During 1977 a policy of reconciliation was initiated, which brought several of Nimeri's former opponents into the administration.

In August 1979 riots broke out in opposition to large increases in petrol prices and the ending of some food subsidies. A major government reshuffle followed, in which the Vice-President and Secretary-General of the SSU, Maj. Abdul Gasim Ibrahim, was removed from office.

Regional and national elections were held in February 1978, with the provision that opposition candidates must be approved by the SSU. About half the 274 elective seats in the National Assembly were won by SSU candidates and almost all Regional Ministers lost their seats in the Regional People's Assembly. In February 1980 Sudan was reorganized into six regions, each with a certain measure of autonomy. President Nimeri dissolved the People's Assembly and elections were held in May for the National and Regional Assemblies. In October a bill legalizing a regional system of government was passed by the Council of Ministers.

The People's Assembly was again dissolved in October 1981, and when new elections were held in December its membership had been reduced from 366 to 151, as many powers had been devolved to the new regions. At the same time the Executive Council for Southern Sudan was dismissed, and in December about 20 former regional ministers were arrested for resisting President Nimeri's plans to create three semi-autonomous regions in the south. The entire Sudanese Government was dismissed in November, although many individuals were later reinstated. In January 1982 Gen. Abdel-Majid Khalil, Vice-President, SSU Secretary-General and Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces, was removed from all posts, and the Political Bureau, Central Committee and General Secretariat of the SSU were suspended. Both purges were in retribution for the programme of economic austerity introduced in November 1981 as a condition for an IMF loan.

Sudan enjoys growing links with a variety of African, Arab and European countries, as well as the U.S.A. (from which Sudan receives military aid) and the People's Republic of China. Following an unsuccessful coup in July 1976, Sudan severed diplomatic relations with Libya and established a mutual defence pact with Egypt. Relations with Ethiopia deteriorated early in 1977 following allegations that Sudan was aiding Eritrean secessionists in Ethiopia, although the countries were later reconciled. Sudan closed the border with Ethiopia to Eritrean rebels in 1980, when there were an estimated 440,000 refugees in Sudan, principally from the Eritrean conflict but also from Uganda. Diplomatic relations with Libya were restored in February 1978 but became strained in 1981 during Libya's occupation of Chad.

President Nimeri was one of very few Arab leaders to support President Sadat of Egypt's initiative for peace with Israel in 1978. Sudan's policy of close political, cultural and economic co-operation with Egypt forged by Presidents Nimeri and Sadat was to continue despite the latter's assassination in October 1981.

Government

Under the 1973 Constitution, executive power is vested in the President, nominated by the Sudanese Socialist Union (SSU), the only recognized political organization. The President governs with the assistance of an appointed Council of Ministers. Legislative power is vested in the unicameral People's Assembly of 151 members: 68 elected for four years by universal adult suffrage, 70 indirectly-elected representatives of farmers, industrial workers, intellectuals and the armed forces, and 13 appointed by the President. All members of the Assembly must either belong to or be approved by the SSU. Sudan comprises six regions, each with its own regional assembly.

The Regional Constitution for Southern Sudan grants the three southern provinces of Sudan autonomy from the central government in all matters except defence and foreign affairs, and the area has a 60-member Regional People's Assembly and an Executive Council.

Defence

The armed forces totalled 71,000 in July 1981: army 68,000, navy 1,500, air force 1,500. Para-military forces total 3,500. Defence expenditure for 1980 totalled £$122.7 million. Sudan has a defence agreement with Egypt and receives military aid from the U.S.A. Military service is by conscription.

Economic Affairs

Since the 1969 revolution the economy has become increasingly nationalized although the Government has been forced to change its policy to attract private investment from overseas. Of Sudan's estimated 200 million acres of arable land only about 14 million acres are cultivated but nearly 80 per cent of the population derive their living from the land. In 1980 agriculture accounted for about 40 per cent of G.D.P. and contributed over 90 per cent of total exports. The principal food crops are sorghum (the staple food), cassava and millet, although Sudan aims for self-sufficiency in coffee, tobacco, rice, wheat and sugar by the mid-1980s. The largest foreign exchange earning crop is usually cotton, but in 1980/81 it was surpassed by groundnuts. Other important export crops are oil seeds, mainly sesame seed. Sudan's vast forest areas provide timber and 80 per cent of the world's gum arabic. Production of cotton, grown under irrigation, declined during the early 1970s and wheat was introduced in an attempt to diversify the economy. However, Sudan, prompted by the IMF, reversed this policy in mid-1979, placing renewed emphasis on cotton and other cash crops in an attempt to earn much-needed foreign currency. Just over a quarter of the Gezira scheme, established in the 1920s and covering 2.3 million acres in the area between the Blue and White Niles, is cultivated for cotton and the remainder for sorghum (durra), wheat, groundnuts, rice, pulses and vegetables. In the 1977/78 season the Gezira scheme produced about 350,000 tons of cotton. In December 1977 the Rahad project, designed to irrigate 820,000 acres and to grow medium-staple cotton and groundnuts, came into production.

Iron ore, manganese, magnesite, gold, silver, chromium ore, gypsum, mica, zinc and copper are among Sudan's known minerals, although exploitation of them has been limited by access difficulties and lack of funds. In October 1977 Chevron, a U.S. oil company, began drilling for petroleum in western Sudan. Several oil strikes in 1980 led to total production of 15,000 b/d. It was expected that these wells would provide a third of Sudan's domestic needs by the mid-1980s. An oil refinery at Kosti, in the north, although all existing fields are to the south and west, was expected to be completed in 1985.

Industry is mostly agriculturally-based and about 60 per cent of production is constituted by textiles, flour, vegetable oil, sugar and shoes. A combined sugar cane production and refinery estate, built at Kenana at a cost of nearly U.S.$600 million, began production in February 1980. There are plans for a cement works and paper mills among other large industrial projects, and work has begun on additional sugar refineries.

Transport problems are a severe hindrance to development but work on the Port Sudan-Khartoum oil products pipeline, financed by Kuwait, was completed in December 1977 reducing dependence on rail distribution. Two hydro-electric power stations have been built at Roseires and Sennar, connected to the Blue Nile grid which serves Khartoum and central Sudan. Both schemes were due for major expansion in the early 1980s, as is Khartoum's Burri thermal power station, as part of a project financed by the World Bank to increase electricity generating capacity by 184 MW. Egypt is co-operating with Sudan in constructing the 360-km. Jonglei Canal project, due for completion in 1985, to increase the flow of water in the White Nile, shorten the river route from north to south and aid Southern Sudan through the reclamation of 3.7 million acres of potential agricultural land.

Sudan's plans for development suffer from an acute shortage of finance, both external and internal. A six-year plan (1977-83) to spend £$2,670 million on social and economic development was cancelled in 1979 and replaced by a three-year programme of completing projects already started. An IMF loan arranged in 1979 was also cancelled when Sudan failed to meet the required conditions. A new one-year credit of U.S. $220 million was negotiated in October 1981 to ease immediate balance of payments problems, and the required economic policy was introduced in Sudan the following month. The measures included a devaluation of the Sudanese pound and abolition of the dual exchange rate which had favoured the import of vital commodities, and the reduction of subsidies on fuel, wheat and sugar which led to rioting in early 1982. Sudan's debts of $3,000 million were rescheduled in December 1981. The rise in import prices of petroleum, wheat, sugar and fertilizers has resulted in an increase in the annual trade deficit from $200 million in 1972/73 to an estimated $700 million in 1981/82.

Transport and Communications

There are 5,500 km. of railways owned by the state. A six-year U.S.$165 million plan to modernize the system with French assistance began in 1977. Generally roads are only cleared tracks impassable immediately after rain, and in the northern part of the country most of the roads are closed between July and September. Highways from the capital and Port Sudan to the provinces are under construction and plans have been drawn up for a network of highways in southern and western Sudan. The 1977-83 Plan incorporated a programme of more than 7,000 km. of new roads. A 1,179 km. highway from Port Sudan to Khartoum was opened in October 1980 while the road from Juba to Kitale in Kenya, opened in 1976, provides access to the port of Mombasa. A U.S. $74 million project to improve berthing and cargo-handling services at Port Sudan, rehabilitation of Suakin Port and a new port near Suakin are planned. Sudan Railways operate passenger and freight steamer services on navigable reaches of the Nile. These are linked to the railway services of Egypt, Uganda and Kenya. Sudan Airways, the government airline, maintains internal and external services. In November 1974 the Umm Haraz earth satellite station was completed and this has given Sudan vastly improved international communication links. New relay broadcasting stations have been built at Omdurman and Juba.

Social Welfare

The Ministry of Health organizes the public health services. In 1973 there were 122 hospitals, 139 health centres, 662 dispensaries, 1,708 dressing stations and 115 child welfare centres. In 1976 there were 151 hospitals and 1,652 physicians. Government hospitals had 17,324 beds. A social insurance agreement with Egypt was signed in September 1975.

Education

The Government provides free elementary education from the ages of 7 to 12, intermediate from 13 to 15 and secondary from 16 to 18. It was hoped to reduce the 1975 illiteracy rate of 80 per cent to 50 per cent by 1983, and by 1991 it was hoped to achieve universal primary school enrolment and universal literacy. In 1979/80 there were 41,576 teachers and 1,435,127 pupils in primary schools and 16,170 teachers and 428,703 pupils in intermediate and secondary schools. Pupils from secondary schools are accepted at the University of Khartoum, subject to their reaching the necessary standards. Cairo University also has a Khartoum branch and there is an Islamic university at Omdurman. New universities were opened at Juba and Wad Medani in 1977.

Tourism

The rain forests in the south teem with wild game and attract hunters and observers from all over the world. In the north are the sites of several temples and pyramids of ancient Sudanese civilizations. There is a national park at Dinder. Foreign tourist arrivals totalled 26,714 in 1977.

Public Holidays

1982: May 25th (Anniversary of the Revolution), July 23rd (Id ul Fitr, end of Ramadan), September 29th (Id ul Adha, feast of the sacrifice), October 19th (Muslim New Year), December 25th (Christmas), December 28th (Mouloud, Birth of the Prophet).

1983: January 1st (Independence Day), March 3rd (Unity Day), April 27th (Sham el Nassim).

The dates of the Muslim holidays may be slightly different from those given above.

Weights and Measures

The metric system is gradually replacing traditional weights and measures.

Currency and Exchange Rates

1,000 millièmes = 100 piastres = 1 Sudanese pound (£S).

Exchange rates (December 1981):

£1 sterling = £S 1.731;

U.S. $1 = 900 millièmes.

FINANCE

1,000 millièmes = 100 piastres = 1 Sudanese pound (£S).

Coins: 1, 2, 5 and 10 millièmes; 2, 5 and 10 piastres.

Notes: 25 and 50 piastres; £S1, £S5, £S10 and £S20.

Exchange rates (December 1981): £1 sterling = £S1.731; U.S. $1 = 900 millièmes.

£S100 = £57.77 sterling = $111.11.

Note: The Sudanese pound was introduced in April 1957, replacing (at par) the Egyptian pound, valued at U.S. $2.87156 since September 1949. This valuation was maintained in Sudan until June 1978, despite two devaluations of the U.S. dollar (in December 1971 and February 1973). The Sudanese pound was devalued to U.S. $2.50 ($1 = 400 millièmes) in June 1978 and to $2.00 ($1 = 500 millièmes) in September 1979. From September 1979 a "parallel" rate of £S1 = $1.25 was introduced for specified imports and exports. In November 1981 the two-tier system was ended and a unified rate of $1 = 900 millièmes (£S1 = $1.11) established. The exchange rate was £1 sterling = 835.78 millièmes (£S1 = £1.1965 sterling) from November 1967 to August 1971; and £1 sterling = 907.42 millièmes (£S1 = £1.102 sterling) from December 1971 to June 1972.

THE CONSTITUTION

A Provisional Constitution was introduced by the Revolutionary Command Council in August 1971. A People's Council, including various categories of the people's working forces, was called to draft and ratify a permanent constitution. It was endorsed by the People's Assembly in April 1973 as the Permanent Constitution of Sudan.

The President

The President must be a Sudanese of at least 35 years of age. He is nominated by the Sudanese Socialist Union, is Head of State, and is responsible for maintaining the Constitution. He may appoint Vice-Presidents, a Prime Minister and Ministers who are responsible to him. He is the Supreme Commander of the People's Armed Forces and Security Forces, and the Supreme Head of the Public Service.

If satisfied that a national crisis exists, the President may declare a State of Emergency, which may entail the suspension of any or all freedoms and rights under the Permanent Constitution other than that of resort to the courts. In the event of the President's death, the First Vice-President will temporarily assume office for a period not exceeding 60 days. Following the abortive coup of September 1975, a constitutional amendment was introduced which empowers the President to take any measures and decisions he sees as "suitable".

The People's Assembly

The duration of a sitting is four years and sittings are held in public. A quorum consists of half the number of members. Amendments to the Constitution may be proposed by the President or one third of the membership of the People's Assembly. An amendment to the Constitution must have a two-thirds majority of the People's Assembly and the assent of the President. The National People's Assembly had 151 seats after the December 1981 elections. There are 68 members elected for four years by universal adult suffrage, 70 members nominated by workers and other groups and 13 appointed by the President.

Judiciary

The State is subject to the rule of law which is the basis of government. The judiciary is an independent body directly responsible to the President and judges are appointed by the President.

Religion

Unrestricted freedom of religion is allowed and mention is specifically made of the Islamic and Christian religions.

Regional Government

Under the Regional Constitution for the Southern Sudan, the southern provinces form a single region, with its own regional executive in Juba headed by a president. The regional executive is responsible for all matters except national defence, external affairs, economic and social development, education, currency and coinage, air and inter-regional river transport, communications and tele-communications, nationality and immigration, public audit, customs and foreign trade regulations except for border trade. The Regional President is appointed by and responsible to a Regional People's Assembly. The Assembly may postpone legislation of the central Government which it considers adverse to the interests of the South, though the President is not compelled to accede to its request. The Regional Constitution can be amended only by a four-fifths majority of the central People's Assembly, where southerners are represented. The Regional People's Assembly consists of 60 members of whom 30 represent the geographical areas, 21 the people's working forces alliance and 9 the administrative units. They are elected by direct secret ballot.

Regional Assemblies in the five new regions established in 1980 were being set up in 1981.

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

The administration of justice is the function of the judiciary, as a separate and independent department of state. The judiciary is formed of two divisions, the Civil Division, headed by the Chief Justice, and the Sharia (Islamic Law) Division, headed by the Grand Kadi. The general administrative supervision and control of the judiciary is vested in the Higher Judiciary Council headed by the President of the Republic. The members are the Chief Justice, who is also the President of the Supreme Court, the Grand Kadi, the Minister of Public Service and Administrative Reform, the Minister of Finance and Economics, the Attorney General, the two deputies of the Chief Justice, the deputy Grand Kadi and the Dean of the Faculty of Law of the University of Khartoum. If the President does not preside, nor deposes one of the Vice-Presidents to preside, then the Chief Justice does so, as is often the case.

The structure of the judiciary is to be reconsidered following several resignations in February 1981.

Civil Justice: is administered by the courts constituted under the 1976 Judiciary Act, namely the Supreme Court, Courts of Appeal and Other Courts. The Supreme Court consists of a president (the Chief Justice), his two deputies, the Grand Kadi and his deputy and sufficient judges of the Supreme Court. It is the custodian of the constitution under the Permanent Constitution of Sudan of 1973. The powers and jurisdiction of the courts are defined by the Code of Civil Procedure of 1974.

Criminal Justice: is administered by the courts constituted under the 1976 Judiciary Act, namely Major Courts and Magistrates' Courts, and their powers and jurisdiction are defined by the Criminal Procedure Code of 1974. Serious crimes are tried by Major Courts which are composed of a president and two members and have power to pass the death sentence. Major Courts are as a rule presided over by a magistrate of the First Class. There is a right of appeal against any decision or order of a Major Court and findings of guilty of murder and sentences of death or life imprisonment are subject to confirmation by the Supreme Court.

Lesser crimes are tried by Magistrates' Courts consisting of a single magistrate, or a bench of magistrates.

Local People's Courts: constituted under the 1976 Local People's Court Act to try a substantial portion of criminal and civil cases and work to some extent with the State Courts.

Chief Justice and President of the Supreme Court: KHALA-FALLA EL RASHID.

SHARIA (ISLAMIC LAW) COURTS

Justice in personal matters for the Muslim population is administered by the courts constituted under the 1976 Judiciary Act. These courts consist of panels of judges in personal matters. The religious Law of Islam is administered by these courts in matters of inheritance, marriage, divorce, family relationships and charitable trusts.

Grand Kadi: Sheikh MOHAMED EL GIZOULI.

Mufti: AWADALLA SALIH.

RELIGION

The majority of the northern Sudanese population are followers of Islam while in the South the population is mostly either Animist or Christian. It is estimated that there are more than 9 million Muslims and over 500,000 Catholics. The Government plans to create a Sudanese National Church.

The Government, which provides the land and is responsible for irrigation, receives 36 per cent of the net proceeds; the tenants, about 100,000 in 1976, receive 49 per cent. The Board receives 10 per cent, the local Government Councils in the Scheme area 2 per cent and the Social Development Fund, set up to provide social services for the inhabitants, 3 per cent. This system was to be replaced in July 1981 by a land and water charge to be paid by tenants who were to receive the work proceeds. The role of the Board would be to provide agricultural services at cost, technical supervision and execution of government agricultural policies relating to the Gezira scheme. Tenants were to continue to pay a percentage of their proceeds to the Social Development Fund. The Scheme was to retain its main objectives as an integrated socio-economic enterprise. The total possible cultivable area of the Gezira Scheme is over 5 million acres and the total area under systematic irrigation is now 2.3 million acres. In addition to cotton, groundnuts, sorghum, wheat, rice, pulses and vegetables are grown for the benefit of tenant farmers; Man. Dir. Dr. HASSAN EL TAYEB EL HAG.

TRADE FAIR

Sudan Exhibitions and Fairs Corporation (Sudanexpo): P.O.B. 2366, Khartoum; Dir.-Gen. OMAR MOHAMMED SAID.

TRANSPORT

RAILWAYS

Sudan Railways Corporation: P.O.B. 1812, Khartoum; P.O.B. 65, Atbara; Gen. Man. S. MOHAMED EL TAYEB.

The total length of railway in operation in 1980 was 5,500 route-kilometres. The main line runs from Wadi Halfa, on the Egyptian border, to El Obeid, via Khartoum. Lines from Atbara and Sinnar connect with Port Sudan on the coast. There are lines from Sinnar to Damazine on the Blue Nile (227 km.) and from Aradeiba to Nyala in the south-western province of Darfur (689 km.), with a 445 km. branch line from Babanousa to Wau in the former Bahr el Ghazal Province. A six-year plan to modernize the system, with French assistance, was scheduled to begin in 1977.

ROADS

National Transport Corporation: P.O.B. 723, Khartoum; Gen. Man. MOHI EL DIN HASSAN MOHAMED NUR.

Public Corporation for Roads and Bridges: P.O.B. 7565, Khartoum; f. 1976; Chair. ABDEL RAHMAN HABOUD; Dir.-Gen. ABDU MOHAMMED ABDU.

Roads in northern Sudan, other than town roads, are only cleared tracks and often impassable immediately after rain. Motor traffic on roads in the former Upper Nile Province is limited to the drier months of January-May. There are several good gravelled roads in the former Equatoria and Bahr el Ghazal Provinces which are passable all the year, but in these districts some of the minor roads become impassable after rain. Rehabilitation of communications in Southern Sudan is a major priority as the civil war completely destroyed 1,600 km. of roads and 70 bridges.

In 1977 construction of a 960-km. road linking Juba and Wau was begun with assistance from the Federal Republic of Germany. The Wad-Medani to Gedaref highway, financed by a loan from the People's Republic of China, was completed in March 1977. Over 48,000 km. of tracks are classed as "motorable", but only 2,000 km. were asphalt in 1980. A 1,190 km. tarmac road linking the capital with Port Sudan was completed during 1980.

INLAND WATERWAYS

River Transport Corporation: P.O.B. 284, North Khartoum; operates 2,500 km. of steamers on the Nile; Chair. ALI AMIR TAHA.

River Navigation Corporation: Khartoum; f. 1970; jointly owned by the Egyptian and Sudanese Governments; operates services between Aswan and Wadi Halfa.

SUDAN

Transport, Tourism

The total length of navigable waterways served by passenger and freight services is 4,068 km. From the Egyptian border to Wadi Halfa and Khartoum navigation is limited by cataracts to short stretches but the White Nile from Khartoum to Juba is navigable at almost all seasons.

SHIPPING

Port Sudan, on the Red Sea, 784 km. from Khartoum, is the only seaport. There are plans to build a port at New Suakin by 1985.

Red Sea Shipping Corporation: P.O.B. 1116, Khartoum; Gen. Man. OSMAN AMIN.

Sea Ports Corporation: P.O.B. 2534, Khartoum; Administrator KHALID AL-SADIG.

Sudan Shipping Line Ltd.: P.O.B. 426, Port Sudan and P.O.B. 1731, Khartoum; f. 1960; seven vessels totalling 53,638 d.w.t. operating between the Red Sea and Western Mediterranean, Northern Europe and United Kingdom; Chair. ISMAIL BAKHEIT; Gen. Man. SALAH EDDIN OMER AL AZIZ.

United African Shipping Co.: P.O.B. 339, Khartoum; Gen. Man. MOHAMED TAHA EL GINDI.

CIVIL AVIATION

The airports at Juba and Malakal in Southern Sudan are to be repaired and new airports built at Wau and Port Sudan.

Civil Aviation Department: Dir.-Gen. SIR HASSAN BESHIR.

Sudan Airways Corporation: Gamhouria Ave., P.O.B. 253, Khartoum; f. 1946; government-owned; internal services and international services to Bahrain, Chad, Egypt, Ethiopia, the Federal Republic of Germany, Greece, Kenya, Italy, Lebanon, Nigeria, Saudi Arabia, Uganda and the United Kingdom; fleet of 2 Boeing 737, 3 Boeing 707, 5 Fokker F-27 and 1 Twin Otter; Chair. Dr. ABDEL MAGID H. KHALIL; Gen. Man. ALI MUSA OMER.

Sudan is also served by the following foreign airlines: Aeroflot (U.S.S.R.), Air France, Alitalia, British Airways, EgyptAir, Ethiopian Airlines, Interflug (German Democratic Republic), KLM (Netherlands), Libyan Arab Airlines, Lufthansa (Federal Republic of Germany), MEA (Lebanon), SAS (Sweden), Saudia (Saudi Arabia), Swissair, Tunis Air, TWA (U.S.A.) and Yemen Airways (Yemen Arab Republic).

TOURISM

Public Corporation of Tourism and Hotels: P.O.B. 2424, Khartoum; Chair. and Dir.-Gen. MAHGOUB MOHAMED ALI.

SURINAME

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of Suriname lies on the north-east of the South American continent between Guyana, on the west, and French Guiana, on the east. Brazil lies to the south. The climate is tropical, with fairly heavy rainfall and temperatures of 26°–34°C (79°–93°F). The official language is Dutch (used by 37 per cent of the population in 1964). The other main languages are Hindustani (32 per cent) and Javanese (15 per cent). The majority of the people speak the native language Sranang Tongo (taki-taki), and Chinese, English, French and Spanish are also used. The principal religions are Christianity (45 per cent of the population in 1964), Hinduism (28 per cent) and Islam (20 per cent). The flag (proportions 3 by 2) has five horizontal stripes: a broad central band of red (bearing a yellow star), edged with white, between bands of green. The capital is Paramaribo.

Recent History

Settlers from England landed in Suriname in the 1630s and the area was alternately an English and a Dutch colony until finally accredited to the Netherlands in 1814. Under the 1954 Charter, Suriname became an equal partner with Holland in the Kingdom of the Netherlands (together with the Netherlands Antilles) with full autonomy in domestic affairs.

The Hindustani-dominated Government, in power since 1969 and led by Dr. Jules Sedney, suffered from a wave of strikes and violence in early 1973, resulting from the Government's refusal to grant extensive wage increases. The Government resigned and general elections in November 1973 resulted in a victory for an alliance of parties favouring complete independence from the Netherlands. Henck Arron, leader of the Nationale Partij Suriname (a predominantly Creole party), became Prime Minister in December 1973 and stated that his Government would strive for independence before the end of 1975.

In May 1975 it was agreed that Suriname would become independent on November 25th, and that the Dutch Government would give 3,500 million guilders in aid. Internally, the opposition Hindustani party opposed immediate independence on economic grounds. Major problems at independence included the emigration of some 40,000 Surinamese to the Netherlands, resulting in a lack of skilled workers, and border disputes with French Guiana and Guyana. The general elections of October 1977 resulted in a clear majority for the ruling Nationale Partij Kombinatie and Henck Arron continued as Prime Minister.

The Government of Henck Arron was overthrown in February 1980 by a group of soldiers (mainly sergeants) who formed an eight-man military council (Nationale Militaire Raad—NMR). President Ferrier refused to agree to the retention of supreme power by this council, and in March he appointed a civilian administration led by Dr. Henk Chin A Sen, a former leader of the Partij Nationalistische Republiek. In August the army Chief of Staff, NMR member Sgt.-Maj. (later Lt.-Col.) Daysi Bouterse, staged a coup. President Ferrier was replaced by Chin A

Sen. Parliament was dissolved and a state of emergency declared, and leading members of the NMR were arrested on suspicion of planning a left-wing coup.

The centrist Government of Dr. Chin A Sen came under increasing pressure from left-wing army officers, and there were several ministerial reappointments and reallocations of portfolios in the year after the revolution. An unsuccessful coup against Lt.-Col. Bouterse, led by Sgt.-Maj. Wilfred Hawker, was staged in March 1981. In September the President announced details of a draft constitution which sought to limit the army to a supervisory role in government. This move, however, was countered by the army with the formation of the Revolutionary People's Front, a comprehensive civilian political alliance headed by the three army chiefs. Lt.-Col. Bouterse, Maj. Roy Horb and Lt. Iwan Graanogst. In February 1982 the National Military Council, led by Lt.-Col. Bouterse, seized power from Dr. Chin A Sen and his civilian Government. The vice-president of the supreme court, L. F. Ramdat Misier, was appointed interim President. In March a further coup attempt by Sgt.-Maj. Hawker failed, and he was promptly executed.

In 1981 the Government expressed interest in closer links with CARICOM, ties with socialist Grenada were strengthened, and a non-resident ambassador to Cuba was appointed. Relations with the Netherlands have been dominated by the issues of aid and repatriation of Surinamers; the 1980 census revealed that half the Suriname population lives in the Netherlands.

Government

In November 1980 the office of Prime Minister was abolished and the President became executive Head of State. He is assisted by an appointed Council of Ministers. Executive power is held also by the National Military Council. In August 1980 the constitution was suspended and Parliament dissolved. Suriname comprises nine administrative districts.

Defence

The armed forces numbered over 2,000 men and women in 1981.

Economic Affairs

The economy is based on bauxite, which, together with its derivatives (alumina and aluminium), provides about 80 per cent of export earnings, 40 per cent of tax revenue and 30 per cent of G.D.P. The industry is controlled by Suralco, a subsidiary of the U.S. company Alcoa, and Billiton, part of the Royal Dutch/Shell group. In January 1981 Suralco announced a three-year expansion programme, costing U.S. $115 million, to increase smelter capacity and improve the transport network but, by the end of the year, it was forced to cut back output by 20 per cent because of reduced world demand. Other minerals include iron ore (reserves of 6,000 million tons), manganese, copper, nickel, platinum, gold and kaolin. In 1981 the Gulf Oil Corporation discovered petroleum-bearing sand in the Saramacca district, and the Suriname State Oil Commission plans to undertake a pilot research project in the area.

Suriname has great agricultural potential and is self-sufficient in sugar, rice, edible oil, citrus fruits, coffee and bananas. Plantains, pulses, maize, coconuts and groundnuts are also grown, but the rice industry is the only fully developed sector. The fully-mechanized rice farm at Wageningen is one of the largest in the world and, with the planting of 20,000 hectares in western Suriname in 1981, production is expected to double by 1986. Export duty on rice was abolished in 1981 to help boost exports. Oil palm is a relatively new crop and an extensive oil palm installation was set up at Victoria in the Brokopondo area in 1977. Fishing, particularly for shrimps, is growing in importance and its contribution to export earnings rose from 2 per cent in 1973 to 8 per cent by 1977.

About 90 per cent of Suriname is covered by forest but only 10 per cent is commercially exploited. The forestry industry is dominated by Bruynzeel (formerly a Dutch company but since 1976 the Suriname Government has owned 50 per cent of the shares), although the Government hopes for American and Japanese participation in various planned projects. The industrial sector is dominated by foodstuff and consumer industries. The production growth rate varies widely, standing at 18.4 per cent in 1976, 4.9 per cent in 1977, 10.9 per cent in 1978 and 9.2 per cent in 1979.

The 3,500 million guilders in development aid from the Netherlands will be used to increase food self-sufficiency, hydroelectric output and export potential. A major government project, for the construction of an 800 MW hydroelectric power dam on the Kabalebo river, was shelved in December 1981 in favour of smaller projects, including a hydroelectric complex at Phedra-Jay Creek and the construction of a harbour in Apoera on the Corantijn river, a town which is intended to become a centre of economic growth. Major problems include the lack of skilled workers, a low growth rate, little foreign investment and insufficient local production of consumer goods. The rate of inflation rose from 9.7 per cent in 1978 to 14.9 per cent in 1979 and the rate of unemployment was estimated at nearly 30 per cent in 1980.

Suriname is a member of the OAS, the IDB and the International Bauxite Association, and in 1978 joined GATT and the IMF.

Transport and Communications

In 1977 there were 2,500 km. of roads, the majority of which are in the northern half of the country. There were 167 km. of railways in 1980. Suriname is served by a large number of shipping companies and has 1,500 km. of navigable rivers and canals. There is an international airport at Zanderij which is served by various foreign airlines and 35 airstrips throughout the country.

Social Welfare

There is a modern medical service, financed by Dutch and EEC funds, but social welfare has remained largely dependent on private initiative within the various religious communities. In 1978 Suriname had 16 hospitals, with 2,044 beds, and 216 physicians. In 1980 the Government announced its intention to establish a free national health service.

Education

Compulsory education for children between the ages of 6 and 12 has existed since 1876 and is given in government and denominational schools. Education is free up to and including higher education, provided by the University of Suriname. Despite a relatively high literacy rate of 80 per cent, 1,000 volunteer teachers were recruited in 1981 to help carry out the Government's literacy campaign.

Tourism

Tourism is as yet undeveloped but tourist attractions include the unspoiled interior, many varieties of plants, birds and animals and varied cultural activities. The Foundation for Nature Preservation in Suriname is running various pilot schemes in the eight nature reserves already in operation.

Public Holidays

1982: May 1st (Labour Day), July 1st (National Union Day), July 23rd (Id-Ul-Fitr, end of Ramadan), November 25th (Independence Day), December 25th, 26th (Christmas).

1983: January 1st (New Year's Day), February 25th (Revolution Day), March* (Phagwa), April 1st (Good Friday), April 3rd, 4th (Easter).

* Exact date dependent upon sightings of the moon.

Weights and Measures

The metric system is in force.

Currency and Exchange Rates

100 cents = 1 Suriname guilder (guilder).

Exchange rates (December 1981):

£1 sterling = 3.433 guilders;

U.S. $1 = 1.785 guilders.

THE CONSTITUTION

The 1975 Constitution was suspended in August 1980. A new constitution was subsequently drafted by a six-member committee appointed by the National Military Council. The draft constitution provides for a bicameral legislature and for the holding of general and presidential elections. Political parties would be able to operate only within the democratic principles detailed in the constitution. No constitutional role would be accorded to the NMC, but the army would retain a supervisory role through a new Revolutionary Council. It was planned to submit this draft to a referendum in May 1982.

THE GOVERNMENTHEAD OF STATE

President: Dr. HENK CHIN A SEN (appointed August 15th, 1980).

SWAZILAND

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Kingdom of Swaziland is bounded on the north, west, south and south-east by South Africa and by Mozambique on the east. The mean annual temperature on the Highveld is just over 16°C (60°F) and in the sub-humid Lowveld about 22°C (72°F) while annual rainfall ranges from 100 to 225 cm. (40 to 90 inches) on the Highveld and from 50 to 60 cm. (20 to 25 inches) in the Lowveld. English and siSwati are the official languages. Some 60 per cent of the population are Christian and the remainder adhere to traditional beliefs. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) is blue, with a yellow-edged horizontal crimson stripe (half the depth) in the centre. On this stripe is a black and white Swazi shield, superimposed on two spears and a staff. Mbabane is the administrative capital and Lobamba, the traditional capital of the Swazi people, is to become the country's legislative capital.

Recent History

Sobhuza II became Ngwenyama (Paramount Chief) of Swaziland in 1899, when only a few months old, but his mother acted as regent until 1921. In 1903 the country became a British protectorate and in 1907 it was made one of the British High Commission Territories, with Basutoland (now Lesotho) and Bechuanaland (now Botswana).

Swaziland's first constitution was introduced in 1963, and elections to choose members for the first Legislative Council were held the following year. These resulted in an overwhelming victory for the Imbokodvo National Movement, which supports the traditional Swazi way of life allied to progressive evolution. Internal self-government was granted in April 1967 and Swaziland became a protected state, with Sobhuza recognized as King of Swaziland and Head of State. The Imbokodvo National Movement won all seats in the new National Assembly in the 1967 general elections. Its leader, Prince Makhosini Dlamini, was appointed Prime Minister in April 1967. Swaziland became independent, within the Commonwealth, on September 6th, 1968.

In April 1973, in response to a motion passed by both Houses of Parliament, the King repealed the constitution, suspended all political activity and took over all judicial, legislative and executive powers himself. The Ngwane National Liberatory Congress (NNLC) was banned in November 1975 and, following disturbances in October 1977 over pay structures, the Swaziland National Teachers' Organization was also declared a political organization and banned. Political dissent continued throughout 1978 and several senior officials, including Dr. Ambrose Zwane, former leader of the NNLC, were arrested and imprisoned under the 60-day detention law. Dr. Zwane subsequently escaped from detention and returned to Swaziland under a royal amnesty in June 1979, although other leading members of the NNLC remained in detention. Several members of the banned South African Pan-Africanist Congress were detained and expelled from Swaziland in April 1978 and South African refugees were frequent victims of the detention law in 1979. Although attaching considerable importance to good relations with other black African states, Swaziland has maintained a neutral attitude to South Africa. In early 1982 the two Governments were discussing the possibility of transferring to Swaziland the South African-controlled Kangwane "homeland," with a population of 750,000 Swazis.

In October 1978 elections were held, for the first time since the multi-party elections of 1972. The new legislature was opened in January 1979. The Prime Minister, Maj.-Gen. Maphevu Dlamini (who had replaced Prince Makhosini Dlamini in March 1976), died in October 1979 and was succeeded in November by Prince Mabandla N.F. Dlamini. During 1980 the new Prime Minister released a number of detained political opponents, and a commission of enquiry was formed to investigate allegations of government corruption, but its work was effectively terminated following Sobhuza's intervention. As the King celebrated his 60th year as monarch in 1981, the dominant political uncertainty facing Swaziland was the question of succession and of the growing disharmony between the traditional and progressive elements in national life.

Government

Executive authority is vested in the King and is exercised through a Cabinet presided over by a Prime Minister. All Ministers are nominated by the King. Parliament consists of the Senate and the House of Assembly. The House of Assembly has 50 members—40 elected by an 80-member Electoral College and 10 appointed by the King. The Senate has 20 members, 10 elected by the Electoral College and 10 appointed by the King. The constitution was repealed in April 1973 and all political activity was suspended. A Royal Commission on a new constitution reported in January 1975 and during 1978 details of a new constitution were announced and elections held, although the constitution was not formally presented to the people. The country is divided into 40 chieftaincies (Tinkhundla), each of which elects two members to the Electoral College. Each of the country's four regions is to have a council made up of members of the Electoral College, to co-ordinate activities at a regional level and to implement government policies.

Defence

The army, created in 1973, totalled an estimated 2,600 regular troops in November 1981. Swaziland also has a paramilitary police force.

Economic Affairs

Only about 55 per cent of the total land area is Swazi-owned and is held in trust by the King as Nation Land. Traditional subsistence farming is the main source of livelihood in these areas, while the remainder is divided into individual tenure farms owned mainly by Europeans and commercial companies. Agricultural production accounts for about 30 per cent of G.D.P. and about 70 per cent of export earnings. About 75 per cent of the working population is employed in agriculture. Sugar cane is the principal agricultural item in the economy and sugar provided over 46 per cent of export earnings in 1980. There are two sugar mills in the Lowveld, producing 200,000 metric tons of sugar annually, and the large Simunye white sugar complex, which came into production in 1980, was expected to achieve its full production capacity of 120,000 tons in 1982/83. Cattle form the main wealth of the Swazi people, while citrus fruits, cotton, rice and maize are important agricultural products. Swaziland became self-sufficient in maize in 1975 and a series of rural development programmes aims to repeat this achievement with other crops.

There are considerable mineral reserves, especially of chrysolite asbestos, which have been extensively exploited, and coal, of which there were estimated reserves of 1,000 million tons in 1980. In 1977 mining constituted almost 30 per cent of G.D.P. but, following the exhaustion in 1975 of formerly extensive high-grade iron ore reserves, coal production has assumed increased importance. Extensive reserves of anthracitic coal have been identified, and a second bituminous coal mine was coming into operation in 1981. There are plans to construct a coal-fired power station at Mpaka, with South African assistance. The Government is currently investigating the commercial viability of other mineral deposits, which include tin, kaolin, pyrophyllite and silica, and small gold and diamond deposits are being exploited in the north-west part of the country, with the value of gold reserves estimated at between U.S. $3 million and $4 million.

Manufacturing industries are concerned mainly with processing agricultural, livestock and forestry products. Commercial timber reserves cover about 120,000 hectares and the export of wood pulp is the second largest earner of foreign exchange. There are four sawmills of which the largest, at Bhunya, produces about 150,000 metric tons of wood pulp annually. In 1964 Swaziland's first industrial estate was opened at Matsapa and several secondary industries, including a television assembly plant, have become established there. A second industrial centre is being developed in the south at Nhlngano. The construction of a petroleum refinery is also planned. Infrastructural facilities, including the construction of a dam project and two major new townships, were incorporated in the Simunye sugar complex, and in 1980 the U.K. offered grant aid of over E6 million. There are also plans to assist industrialization by providing alternative routes to world markets. One such project under discussion is for a new international airport at Mbabane.

Although company tax remains low and the country is anxious to attract foreign capital, Africanization was speeded up in Swaziland during 1973 with a series of radical measures. These included more participation in the mining industry, part-nationalization of the two main banks, a monopoly of insurance, extra taxes on sugar in the form of a heavy levy on producers and more taxes on the thriving hotel industry as well as a Land Speculation Act. Swaziland's second National Development Plan (1973-77) provided for an estimated expenditure totalling E42 million in 1973-75, with particular emphasis on agriculture. The third National Development Plan, introduced in 1977 and revised in 1980, forecasts average annual growth of 6.5 per cent in the agricultural sector and a maintained share of 30 per cent of G.D.P. Manufacturing and processing sectors are expected to grow by about 7 per cent annually, accounting for 22 per cent of G.D.P., while public sector investment in construction is also set at an annual 7 per cent growth rate by the end of 1983.

Transport and Communications

The 224 km. Swaziland railway runs from the iron ore mine at Ngwenya, near Mbabane, on the western border through the middle of Swaziland to the Mozambique border near Goba, where it connects with the Mozambique line to the port of Maputo. In November 1978 work was completed on a 93 km. rail link with South Africa to give land-locked Swaziland direct access to the ports of Richards Bay and Durban. The line, built at a cost of E25 million, runs from Phuzumoya in Swaziland and joins the South African railways system at Lavumisa (Golle). There are 2,820 km. of roads including a 170 km. highway from Ngwenya, on the western border, to Lomahasha on the Mozambique border, of which 104 km. is tarred. The main airport is at Matsapa, near Manzini.

Social Welfare

In 1976 Swaziland had 17 hospitals, with 1,462 beds, 71 physicians and 364 nurses.

Education

In 1980 there were 450 primary schools with over 112,000 pupils and more than 23,000 pupils in a total of 82 secondary schools. There are two teacher training colleges. Higher education is provided by the University of Botswana and Swaziland which included Lesotho as a third member until its withdrawal from the joint university in October 1975. Vocational and other training is provided by the Swaziland Industrial Training Institute, the Swaziland Agricultural College and University Centre and the Government's Staff Training Institute.

Tourism

Swaziland has some magnificent mountain scenery, particularly in the Ezulwini Valley. There are game reserves at Mlilwane and Hlane. Tourism expanded rapidly to a record 135,000 visitors in 1976, of whom an estimated 80 per cent were short-stay visitors travelling by road from South Africa. Increased petrol prices, however, resulted in a decline to 70,000 tourists in 1978. In 1978 there were 26 hotels and two casinos and there are plans to build other hotels and a third casino.

Public Holidays

1982: May 20th (Ascension Day), July 22nd (King's Birthday), August 24th (Umhlanga (Reed Dance) Day), September 6th (Somhlolo (Independence) Day), October 24th (United Nations Day), December 25th, 26th (Christmas and Boxing Day).

1983: January 1st (New Year's Day), March 14th (Commonwealth Day), April 1st-4th (Easter), April 25th (National Flag Day).

The Incwala Ceremony is held in December or January, but the exact date is variable each year.

Weights and Measures

The metric system is in use.

Currency and Exchange Rates

Swazi and South African currency are both legal tender.

Swazi currency: 100 cents = 1 lilangeni

South African currency: 100 cents = 1 rand (R).

Exchange rates (December 1981):

1 lilar-geni = 1 rand;

£1 sterling = 1,8775 emalangeni or rand;

U.S. $1 = 97.6 Swazi or South African cents.

THE CONSTITUTION

The constitution seeks to maintain a non-racial state in which everyone will be treated equally without discrimination, regardless of race, colour or creed, and securing to everyone freedom and justice and inviolability of their property.

The King of Swaziland, called the Ngwenyama (the Lion) in siSwati, is Head of State. Succession is governed by Swazi law and custom. The executive authority is vested in the King and exercised through a Cabinet of Ministers presided over by the Prime Minister.

The Swazi National Council (Liqoqo), which consists of the King and all adult male Swazi, advises the King on all matters regulated by Swazi law and custom and connected with Swazi traditions and culture.

Under the independence constitution, legislative power was vested in a bicameral Parliament, comprising a Senate and a House of Assembly. In April 1973, in response to a motion passed by both Houses of Parliament, King Sobhuza repealed the constitution, suspended political activity and took over all judicial, legislative and executive powers himself. In September 1973 he announced the appointment of a Royal Constitutional Commission to draw up a new constitution. In March 1977 the King announced the abolition of the parliamentary system and its replacement by traditional tribal communities called Tinkhundla.

A new constitution, which confirmed the power of the King, was promulgated on October 13th, 1978, although it has not been formally presented to the people. The constitution provides for a bicameral Parliament (Libandla), comprising 50 deputies and 20 Senators. Parliament's functions are confined to debating Government proposals and advising the King. No political parties are permitted. An 80-member electoral college, with two members chosen by the people from each Tinkhundla, elects from its members 40 deputies and 10 Senators. The King appoints a further 10 members to each chamber.

SYRIA

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Syrian Arab Republic lies on the eastern shore of the Mediterranean Sea, with Turkey to the north, Iraq to the east and Jordan to the south. Lebanon and Israel are to the south-west. Much of the country is mountainous and semi-desert. The coastal climate is one of hot summers and mild winters. The inland plateau and plains are dry but cold in winter. Average temperatures in Damascus are 2° to 12°C (36° to 54°F) in January and 18° to 37°C (64° to 99°F) in August. The national language is Arabic, with Kurdish a minority language. More than 80 per cent of the population are Muslims but there is an important Christian minority of various sects. The national flag (proportions 2 by 1) is a horizontal tricolour of red, white and black, the central stripe bearing a falcon emblem in gold, but, as this is identical with Egypt's flag, the Government has announced its intention to change it. The capital is Damascus.

Recent History

Syria was formerly part of Turkey's Ottoman Empire. Turkish forces were defeated in the 1914-18 war and Syria was occupied in 1920 by France, in accordance with a League of Nations mandate. Syrian nationalists proclaimed an independent republic in September 1941. French powers were transferred in January 1944 and full independence achieved in April 1946. In December 1949 Syria came under an army dictatorship led by Brig. Adib Shishekly. He was elected President in July 1953 but was overthrown by another army coup in February 1954.

In February 1958 Syria united with Egypt to form the United Arab Republic but following an army coup d'état in September 1961 Syria seceded and formed the independent Syrian Arab Republic. In 1963 Major-Gen. Amin al-Hafiz formed a cabinet in which members of the Arab Socialist Renaissance (Baath) Party were predominant. In February 1966 the army deposed the Government of President Hafiz, replacing him by Dr. Nureddin al-Atasi. However, in November 1970, after a bloodless coup, the military (moderate) wing of the Baath Party seized power, led by Lt.-Gen. Hafiz al-Assad, who was elected President in March 1971. In March 1972 the National Progressive Front, a grouping of the five main political parties, was formed under the leadership of President Assad.

Increasing border tension between Syria and Israel was a major influence leading to the six-day war which broke out in June 1967. An uneasy peace lasted from June 1967 until October 1973, and all attempts by outside powers to arrange a peace settlement failed. War broke out again in October 1973, with fierce fighting in the Golan Heights area, and in May 1974 the U.S. Secretary of State, Dr. Henry Kissinger, secured an agreement for the disengagement of forces. By February 1982 no permanent peace settlement had been achieved, and prospects of a peaceful settlement had dwindled even further after Israel's formal annexation of the Golan Heights in December 1981. Syria did not approve of the second interim Egyptian-Israeli Disengagement Agreement in September 1975, but agreed to acknowledge it as an accomplished fact at the Arab summit conferences in Riyadh and Cairo in October 1976, in return for Egypt's acceptance of Syria's role in Lebanon. Syria had progressively intervened in the Lebanese civil war during 1976, finally providing the bulk of the 30,000-strong Arab Deterrent Force. In mid-1981 tension on a world scale was created for a few weeks when Syria moved missiles into Lebanon for possible use against Israel.

Syria strongly disapproved of President Sadat of Egypt's peace initiative with Israel in November and December 1977, and also was extremely critical of the Camp David agreements between Egypt and Israel, signed in September 1978, and the subsequent peace treaty concluded between Egypt and Israel. In 1981 Syria had deep misgivings about Saudi Arabia's plan for solving the Palestinian question. This "Fahd plan" tacitly recognized Israel, and Syria was not sorry when the Fez Arab Summit in November 1981 broke up because of failure to approve the plan.

Syria's relationship with Iraq has been under strain for some years. Rivalry between different wings of the Baath Party in Damascus and Baghdad led to disputes over Syria's use of the waters of the Euphrates and the closing of the oil pipelines between Kirkuk in Iraq and the Syrian port of Banias on the Mediterranean. There was a brief reconciliation in October 1978, when the two countries pledged to unite, but the friendship ended when a conspiracy in Iraq in July 1979 was attributed to Syrian intrigue.

Plans for union with Libya, announced in September 1980, seem unlikely to be successful. In 1979 and 1980 Syria was very much concerned with its own internal problems. Regular assassinations of Alawites (a Shi'ite minority sect to which Assad belongs) indicated sectarian tension, and Assad attributed much of the opposition to the Muslim Brotherhood, which was still very much in evidence in early 1982. In January 1980, after the Seventh Congress of the Regional Command of the Baath Party, Assad reshuffled his government and Dr. Abdul-Rauf Kasseem replaced Muhammad Ali al-Halabi as Prime Minister. A further reshuffle took place in December 1981. Syria's ties with the U.S.S.R. were strengthened when Assad visited Moscow in October 1979, and confirmed when Syria signed a 20-year Treaty of Friendship and Co-operation with the U.S.S.R. in October 1980.

Government

Under the 1973 Constitution, legislative power is vested in the unicameral People's Council, with 195 members elected by universal adult suffrage. Executive power is vested in the President, elected by direct popular vote for a seven-year term. He governs with the assistance of an appointed Council of Ministers, led by the Prime Minister. Syria has 13 administrative districts.

Defence

Syria has an army, navy and air force. The strength of the army in July 1981 was officially estimated at 170,000, the navy at 2,500 and the air force at 50,000. Para-military forces numbered 9,800 in 1981, and reserves 102,500. National service is compulsory, and lasts for two and a half years except for those with special qualifications, who serve for one and a half years. The bulk of the 30,000-strong Arab Deterrent Force in the Lebanon consists of Syrian troops. Defence expenditure for 1981 was estimated at £$9,378 million.

SYRIA

Economic Affairs

Wheat and cotton, quantities of which are exported, are Syria's chief crops. Petroleum production, which began in 1968, is small compared with some Middle Eastern countries, averaging 170,000 b.p.d. in 1978 and 1979, and 165,000 b.p.d. in 1980. Nevertheless, oil is Syria's leading export. Textiles, food processing and cement are the most important industries.

Aleppo and Damascus are thriving commercial centres. Revenue from the oil pipelines which pass through Syria helps to cover the trade deficit. A major project which is being developed is the Euphrates Dam which will eventually lead to the irrigation of about 640,000 hectares of land, and has been built with Soviet assistance. Considerable electric power is being generated, which in 1979 was supplying more than 95 per cent of the country's needs.

By the end of 1981 Syria's oilfields were past their prime and future prospects for oil exports seemed uncertain. Concentration was necessary on the traditional exports of cotton, textiles, phosphates, etc., and the emphasis of the 1981-85 economic plan is to invest in agriculture rather than industry. The cost of keeping the 30,000-strong Arab (mainly Syrian) Deterrent Force in Lebanon has put a strain on the Syrian economy, but it is alleviated to some extent by "confrontation" aid from other Arab States.

Transport and Communications

Railways run between Homs, Hama and Aleppo and to Beirut in the Lebanon and Amman in Jordan. There is a line from Homs to Tripoli in the Lebanon, and lines from Aleppo to Turkey and Iraq. A 200-km. line between Damascus and Homs is nearing completion. There is a network of main roads and all the principal towns are connected by road. The chief ports are Baniyas and Latakia.

The Arabian American Oil Co. pipeline (TAPLINE) from Saudi Arabia crosses Syria to Sidon in the Lebanon. International services to Damascus and Aleppo are provided by Syrian Airways and major foreign companies.

Social Welfare

State hospitals provide free medical care for persons unable to afford private medical attention. In 1976 Syria had 111 hospitals, with 7,626 beds, and by 1978 there were about 4,000 doctors. Old age pensions, and other benefits, are provided by law.

Education

The Government aims to provide sufficient schools to ensure universal primary education. Over 1.5 million children were receiving state primary education in 1979. There are universities at Damascus, Aleppo and Latakia.

Tourism

Syria's tourist attractions include an attractive Mediterranean coastline, the mountains, the town bazaars and the antiquities of Damascus and Palmyra.

Public Holidays

1982: July 23rd (Egypt's Revolution Day), July 23rd* (Id ul Fitr, end of Ramadan), September 1st (Union of Syria, Egypt and Libya), September 29th (Id ul Adha, Feast of the Sacrifice), October 6th (Beginning of October War), October 19th* (Muslim New Year), November 16th (National Day), December 25th (Christmas Day).

1983: January 1st (New Year's Day), March 8th (Revolution Day, anniversary of the 1963 revolution), April 1st-4th (Latin Easter), May 6th-9th (Greek Easter).

* Muslim religious holidays which may vary slightly from the dates given, depending on sightings of the moon.

FINANCE

100 piastres = 1 Syrian pound (£S).

Coins: 2½, 5, 10, 25 and 50 piastres; 1 pound.

Notes: 1, 5, 10, 25, 50, 100 and 500 pounds.

Exchange rates (December 1981): £1 sterling = £S7.550; U.S. $1 = £S3.925.

£S100 = £13.25 sterling = $25.48.

Note: The official basic exchange rate of U.S. $1 = £S2.19, established in 1949, is inoperative for all practical purposes. Prior to July 1962 the official selling rate, used for calculating the value of foreign trade, was U.S. $1 = £S3.58 (£S1 = 27.97 U.S. cents). From July 1962 to February 1973 the buying rate was $1 = £S3.80 and the selling rate was $1 = £S3.82 (£S1 = 26.18 U.S. cents). Exchange rates were adjusted frequently between February and July 1973. From July 1973 to February 1974 the buying rate was $1 = £S3.75 and the selling rate $1 = £S3.80. From February 1974 to March 1976 the buying rate was $1 = £S3.65 and the selling rate $1 = £S3.70. In April 1976 new rates of $1 = £S3.90 (buying) or £S3.95 (selling) were established. From January 1964 to July 1973 a "parallel" free market was also in operation. From early 1970 to February 1973 the free rates were $1 = £S4.30 (buying) or £S4.32 (selling). In April a two-tier market was reintroduced, with a free "parallel" rate for "invisible" earnings, including remittances from abroad. The official exchange rates were £1 sterling = £S9.12 (buying) or £S9.168 (selling) from November 1967 to August 1971; and £1 sterling = £S9.902 (buying) of £S9.954 (selling) from December 1971 to June 1972.

THE CONSTITUTION

A new and permanent constitution was endorsed by 97.6 per cent of the voters in a national referendum on March 12th, 1973. The 157-article constitution defines Syria as a "Socialist popular democracy" with a "pre-planned Socialist economy". Under the new constitution, Lt.-Gen. al-Assad remained President, with the power to appoint and dismiss his Vice-President, Premier and Government Ministers, and also became Commander-in-Chief of the armed forces, secretary-general of the Baath Socialist Party and President of the National Progressive Front. Legislative power is vested in the People's Council, with 195 members elected by universal adult suffrage.

LEGISLATURE

MAJLIS AL-SHA'AB

Elections were held for the 195-member People's Council in November 1981. All 195 seats were won by the National Progressive Front, which fought the elections as a coalition of four parties (Baath, Arab Socialist Union, Unionist Socialist and Arab Socialist). The results gave the Baath Party at least 60 per cent of the seats. The Communist Party fought the election independently, and lost all eight seats it had held in the previous People's Council. However, it still forms part of the National Progressive Front.

POLITICAL PARTIES

The National Progressive Front, headed by President Assad, was formed in March 1972 by the grouping of the five parties listed below:

Baath Arab Socialist Party: National Command, P.O.B 849, Damascus; Arab socialist party; f. 1947; in power since 1963; supports militant Arab unity; Sec.-Gen. HAFIZ AL-ASSAD; Asst. Sec.-Gen. ABDULLAH AL-AHMAR; Regional Asst. Sec.-Gen. ZUHAYR MASARIQAH; publs. al-Baath (daily), al-Mumadel (monthly).

Syrian Arab Socialist Union: Nasserite; Leader Dr. JAMAL ATASI; Sec.-Gen. FAUZI KAYYALI.

Unionist Socialist: Leader SAMI SOUFAN; Sec.-Gen. FAYIZ ISMAIL.

Arab Socialist Party: a breakaway socialist party; Leader ABDEL GHANI KANNOUT.

Communist Party of Syria: Sec.-Gen. KHALID BAGDASH.

TRANSPORT

RAILWAYS

Syrian Railways: B.P. 182, Aleppo; Pres. of the Board of Administration and Gen. Man. Ing. FATHI EL-HASSAN.

The present railway system is composed of the following network:

Meydan Ekbez (Turkish frontier)-Aleppo; Cobanbey (Turkish frontier)-Aleppo; Qamishliya (Turkish frontier)-Jaroubieh (Iraq frontier); Aleppo-Homs; Koussair (Lebanese frontier)-Aleppo; Homs-Akkari (Lebanese frontier); there are 1,537 km. of normal gauge track. A line from Latakia to Kameshli (750 km.) has been completed and is operating for passenger and goods traffic. Other new lines completed include an 180-km. line from Homs to Khenefes and Palmyra, a 22-km. line from Hama to Meharden and a 42-km. line from Tartous to Akkari. A line from Homs to Damascus (204 km.) is nearing completion.

Syrian Railways: Northern Lines: 248 km.; Southern Lines: 295 km.

Hejaz Railways (narrow gauge): 301 km. in Syria; the historic railway to Medina is the subject of a reconstruction project jointly with Jordan and Saudi Arabia, but little progress has been made since the June 1967 war. Trains run from Damascus to Amman.

ROADS

Arterial roads run across the country linking the north to the south and the Mediterranean to the eastern frontier. The main arterial networks are as follows: Sidon (Lebanon)-Quneitra-Sweida-Salkhad-Jordan border; Beirut (Lebanon)-Damascus - Khan Abu Chamat - Iraq border - Baghdad; Tartous - Tell Kalakh - Homs - Palmyra; Banias - Hama - Salemie; Latakia - Aleppo - Rakka - Deir - ez - Zor - Abou Kemal-Iraq border; Tripoli (Lebanon)-Tartous-Banias-Latakia; Turkish border - Antakya; Amman (Jordan) -

Trade and Industry, Transport, Tourism

Dera'a - Damascus - Homs - Hama - Aleppo - Azaz (Turkish border); Kuneitra - Damascus - Palmyra - Deir-ez-Zor - Hassetche - Kamechlie.

Asphalted roads: 13,000 km., macadam roads: 1,300 km., earth roads: 6,000 km.

Projects for the construction of a further 1,600 km. of main roads are under way; the extended network is to improve links with the east of the country and with Iraq, Jordan, Lebanon and Turkey.

PIPELINES

The oil pipelines which cross Syrian territory are of great importance to the national economy, representing a considerable source of foreign exchange. Iraq halted the flow of oil through the pipeline between Kirkuk and Banias in April 1976, but it was resumed in February 1979.

Following the Iraq Government's nationalization of the Iraq Petroleum Company, the Syrian Government nationalized the IPC's pipelines, pumping stations and other installations in Syria, setting up a new company to administer them:

Syrian Company for Oil Transport (SCOT): Dir.-Gen. HANNA HADDAD.

SHIPPING

The port of Latakia is being developed and about 2,500 ships used the port in 1979; it is planned to increase the port's capacity to 5 million tons per year. A new port at Tartous is under construction.

TANZANIA

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The United Republic of Tanzania consists of Tanganyika and the islands of Zanzibar and Pemba. Tanganyika lies on the east coast of Africa, with Uganda and Kenya to the north, Zaire to the west and Zambia, Malawi and Mozambique to the south. Zanzibar and Pemba are in the Indian Ocean about 40 km. off the coast north of Dar es Salaam. The climate varies with altitude, ranging from tropical in Zanzibar and on the coast and plains to semi-temperate in the highlands. The official languages are Swahili and English and there are a number of tribal languages. There are Christian, Hindu and Muslim communities. Many Africans follow traditional beliefs. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) is green and blue, divided by a yellow-edged dark brown diagonal stripe from lower left to upper right. The administrative functions of the capital are being transferred from Dar es Salaam to Dodoma. This transfer is due to be completed in 1986.

Recent History

Formerly a United Nations Trusteeship Territory under British administration, Tanganyika became independent on December 9th, 1961. The first general election was held in 1958, and in September 1960 Dr. Julius Nyerere became Chief Minister after his party, the Tanganyika African National Union (TANU), won 70 of the 71 seats in the National Assembly. In December 1962 Tanganyika became a Republic and Dr. Nyerere the first President.

Zanzibar, a British Protectorate since 1890, became an independent sultanate in December 1963. Following an armed uprising by the Afro-Shirazi Party in January 1964, the sultan was deposed and a republic proclaimed. The new government signed an Act of Union with Tanganyika in April 1964, thus creating the United Republic. The union was named Tanzania in October 1964 and became a one-party state in July 1965. At general elections in 1965, 1970 and 1975, President Nyerere was re-elected almost unanimously.

In April 1972 Sheikh Abeid Karume, leader of Zanzibar and First Vice-President of the United Republic, was assassinated. Aboud Jumbe, appointed his successor, reorganized the Government of the island in August 1972 by extending the powers of the Afro-Shirazi Party. Despite its incorporation in Tanzania, Zanzibar remains under a separate administration which has ruthlessly suppressed all opposition and in June 1980 a plotted coup against Aboud Jumbe was thwarted. Elections for a 40-member Zanzibar Council of Representatives were held for the first time in January 1980.

In February 1977 TANU and the Afro-Shirazi Party were amalgamated to form Chama Cha Mapinduzi (CCM) (the Revolutionary Party of Tanzania) and Rashidi Kawawa, Prime Minister since February 1972, was replaced by Edward Sokoine, formerly Minister of Defence. In April 1977 the National Assembly approved a permanent constitution for Tanzania. Presidential and general elections were held in October 1980: Dr. Nyerere and Aboud Jumbe were reaffirmed in office by 93 per cent of the voters. However, about half the elected members of the National Assembly, including several ministers, failed to retain their seats; this was seen as a protest against commodity shortages and inefficient bureaucracy. Edward Sokoine stepped down from the Prime Ministership because of ill health and was replaced by Cleopa Msuya. Several officials, including two ministers, were dismissed in January 1981 for inefficiency and corruption. Similar dismissals continued in 1981, and a cabinet reshuffle in February 1982 followed a wide-ranging reorganization of the CCM administrative structure. Although Nyerere appeared to face no serious challenge from within Tanzania, the hijack to Britain of an Air Tanzania internal flight drew attention to the existence of dissident opinion.

Tanzania gave active support to the Mozambique Liberation Front (Frelimo) in its fight for an independent Mozambique, as it has done for other national liberation movements in the southern continent, and the two countries co-operate closely on the basis of a common socialist ideology. In 1976 a joint commission was established to improve political, economic and cultural ties between them. Relations with Zambia, strengthened after the re-routing of much of the latter's trade through Tanzania after Rhodesia closed its border in 1973, were consolidated when the Chinese-built Tanzanian-Zambian railway (Tazara) began service in 1975.

Relations with Uganda and Kenya were uneasy throughout the 1970s, particularly after the dissolution of the East African Community (EAC) in 1977. In April 1979 Tanzanian regular troops supported the Uganda National Liberation Front in the overthrow of President Amin. Up to 20,000 Tanzanian troops remained in Uganda during much of 1979 and 1980 at considerable financial cost to Tanzania. In December 1980 Dr. Milton Obote, who had been in exile in Tanzania since his ousting by Amin in 1971, was returned to power as President (see the chapter on Uganda). In late 1981 Tanzania, Kenya and Uganda were close to a final agreement on the distribution of assets belonging to the defunct EAC. However, the border with Kenya has remained closed since 1977 and Tanzania's reluctance to normalize these relations or enter into new regional economic agreements was expressed in its refusal to participate in 1981 in the Lusaka Agreement for an 18-nation preferential trade area covering East and Central Africa.

Government

Tanzania is a one-party state. Under the 1965 Constitution, with subsequent amendments, legislative power is held by the unicameral National Assembly, with constitutional provision for a total of 239 members, comprising 101 members from Tanganyika and 10 from Zanzibar elected for five years by direct universal adult suffrage; 15 national members representing statutory bodies; 10 members from the mainland appointed by the President; 25 Regional Commissioners (including five from Zanzibar); 32 members appointed by the Zanzibar Revolutionary Council; 20 members appointed by the President to represent Zanzibar; and the Vice-President, who must represent Zanzibar if the President comes from the mainland, and vice versa. Executive power lies with the President, elected by popular vote for five years. He appoints a Vice-President, a Prime Minister and a Cabinet. A single Presidential candidate is nominated by the ruling party, Chama Cha Mapinduzi, whose leading organ is the National Executive, elected by party members. Zanzibar has its own administration for internal affairs and a separate constitution for the islands was adopted in October 1979, with provisions for an elected President and a Council of Representatives elected by party members.

Defence

Total armed forces numbered 44,850 in July 1981, of whom an estimated 43,000 were in the army, 850 in the navy and 1,000 in the air force. There are also paramilitary forces consisting of a 1,400-strong Police Field Force and a 35,000-strong Citizens' Militia. In 1980/81 defence expenditure totalled 1,480 million shillings.

Economic Affairs

The economy is mainly agricultural and much of the farming is at subsistence level. Agriculture, forestry and fishing employ about 90 per cent of the labour force and contributed 41 per cent of G.D.P. in 1980.

In 1970 the Government initiated a communal ujamaa village scheme, with a view to raising rural standards of living and agricultural production and developing local industries. This programme was accelerated in 1973, when about 200 medium- and small-scale farms were nationalized. The disruption of traditional agriculture, coupled with serious drought, adversely affected crop production from 1971 to 1974, although agricultural output improved in 1975. By 1981 there were over 8,000 registered villages, holding more than 90 per cent of the rural population, although only a small proportion were ujamaa. In December 1980 it was announced that the responsibility for collecting food and export crops was to be returned from State enterprises to peasant-run co-operatives to increase production of foreign-exchange earning export crops, which seriously declined in 1980 and, aggravated by severe drought, again in 1981.

The main cash crops and export earners are coffee, cotton, sisal, tea and cashew nuts, though farmers have been encouraged to concentrate on essential food crops, principally cassava and maize. A project partly financed by the World Bank aimed to make Tanzania self-sufficient in grain by 1982. However, it was expected that 260,000 tons of relief food would be imported in 1982 to avert famine. Sugar, tobacco and pyrethrum are other important traditional crops. Cloves are grown on the islands and account for 80 per cent of Zanzibar's foreign exchange earnings. There is a small mineral sector, including diamonds and other gemstones, and there are plans to revitalize gold mining after its decline in the 1960s. There are iron ore reserves estimated at 130 million tons at Chunya and Liganga in the south-west of the country, and an estimated 200 million tons of coal have been discovered at nearby Ketewaka-Mchuchuma. A West German company was granted exclusive uranium prospecting rights in 1979 and petroleum prospecting has been carried out in the Selous Game Reserve and off the Tanzanian coast. There is a petroleum refinery at Dar es Salaam with an annual capacity of 750,000 metric tons.

The industrial sector is small and dominated by parastatal enterprises, many of which are proving unprofitable. The most important industries are food processing, textiles, brewing and cigarette manufacture, though basic industries are being developed. State investment has been directed at the sugar industry, textiles, tanneries, pulp and paper, cement, sisal and cashew nut processing, and small rural industries are being stimulated. The Kidatu hydro-electric scheme, with a capacity of 200,000 kW, was due to be completed in 1981. Energy is a major problem and petroleum imports absorbed 60 per cent of Tanzania's foreign exchange earnings in 1981. Tourism is an important source of foreign exchange and, in spite of the border closure with Kenya, revenue from tourism rose from 72 million shillings in 1977 to about 90 million shillings in 1980.

From 1972 to 1976 the economy felt the effects of the prolonged drought, rising inflation and world economic recession. Economic growth was resumed with the end of the drought in 1976/77 and G.D.P. grew by 5.2 per cent in 1976, 5.9 per cent in 1977 and 5.6 per cent in 1978. A five-year development plan, giving priority to industry, mining and agriculture, began in 1977, with a 6 per cent target for annual growth. Successive budgets containing strict cost-cutting measures and increased indirect taxation have been introduced since 1979 in attempts to halt the economic decline, which had been accelerated by the invasion of Uganda. After making pledges of increased production and export efficiency, and reduced government expenditure, a stand-by credit was arranged with the IMF in August 1980. However, this was withdrawn when Tanzania resisted the demands for massive devaluation and other measures which were incompatible with the Government's socialist strategy. In October 1981 the World Bank again advised the Government to reduce both state intervention in the economy and government spending, and an austerity programme was introduced. The Government warned, however, that the economic situation was likely to worsen in 1982 despite renewed efforts to end food shortages and increase foreign exchange earnings.

Transport and Communications

Tanzania has 2,600 km. of railways and 16,000 km. of major roads. The Chinese-built, 1,860-km. Tanzanian-Zambian railway (Tazara) links Dar es Salaam with the Zambian copperbelt. Sweden, the World Bank and the International Development Association are financing the rebuilding of 500 km. of the Tanzam Highway, a 1,930-km. road running from central Zambia to Dar es Salaam. The three main sea ports are Dar es Salaam, Tanga and Mtwara and the chief port on Lake Victoria is Mwanza. In November 1979 a ports modernization scheme was introduced and a four-year expansion project for Dar es Salaam airport was begun in 1981. Air services link the towns and, following the collapse of East African Airways early in 1977, a national airline, Air Tanzania, was established. There are also private and charter services and the larger farms and plantations have their own aircraft.

Social Welfare

The state-sponsored Rural Development Division exists to improve educational, labour and health conditions in small communities. The state operates hospitals and health centres while Christian Missions also provide medical care.

In 1975 Tanganyika had 2,144 hospital establishments, with 24,711 beds, and 797 physicians. In June 1980 privately-owned medical facilities were nationalized.

Education

Education at all levels is free and most schools receive state aid, the remainder being organized by missions and other voluntary agencies. Villages are encouraged to build their own schools with government assistance and to run adult literacy classes. In 1980 it was estimated that over 95 per cent of school-age children would receive at least seven years of education. Adult literacy rose from 33 per cent in 1967 to 73 per cent in 1978. The University of Dar es Salaam has approximately 2,800 students.

Tourism

The principal tourist attractions are the scenery and wildlife. The famous Serengeti National Park contains a great variety of game, and safari-parties come from all over the world. Mount Kilimanjaro is the highest mountain in Africa. In 1980 170,000 tourists visited Tanzania.

Public Holidays

1982: May 1st (International Labour Day), July 7th (Saba Saba (Farmers') Day), July 23rd (Id ul Fitr, end of Ramadan), September 29th (Id ul Adha, Feast of the Sacrifice), December 9th (Republic Day), December 25th (Christmas), December 28th (Mouloud, Birth of the Prophet).

1983: January 12th (Zanzibar Revolution Day), February 5th (Chama Cha Mapinduzi Day), April 1st-4th (Easter), April 26th (Union Day).

Weights and Measures

The metric system is in force.

Currency and Exchange Rates

100 cents = 1 Tanzanian shilling.

Exchange rates (December 1981):

£1 sterling = 16.01 Tanzanian shillings;

U.S. $1 = 8.32 Tanzanian shillings.

FINANCE

100 cents = 1 Tanzanian shilling.
Coins: 5, 20 and 50 cents; 1 and 5 shillings.
Notes: 5, 10, 20 and 100 shillings.

Exchange rates (December 1981): £1 sterling = 16.01 Tanzanian shillings; U.S. $1 = 8.32 Tanzanian shillings.
100 Tanzanian shillings = £6.25 = $12.02.

Note: The Tanzanian shilling was introduced in July 1966, replacing (at par) the East African shilling, equal to one shilling sterling (£1 = 20 shillings). From September 1949 the shilling was equivalent to 14 U.S. cents (U.S. $1 = 7.143 shillings) and this valuation remained in force until July 1973. When the U.S. dollar was devalued in December 1971 the rate of Tanzanian shillings per IMF Special Drawing Right (SDR) was fixed at 7.755. In February 1973 the dollar was again devalued and the exchange rate became 1 SDR = 8.617 shillings. In July 1973 Tanzania's currency was revalued by 3.5 per cent, with a new exchange rate of $1 = 6.90 shillings (1 SDR = 8.324 shillings), but in January 1974 the shilling was restored to its earlier valuation of 14 U.S. cents ($1 = 7.143 shillings). From July 1974 the fixed relationship between the SDR and the U.S. dollar was ended but the Tanzanian shilling remained tied to U.S. currency. This remained in force until October 1975, when the link between the shilling and the U.S. dollar was ended and the shilling's value tied to the SDR (based on a weighted "basket" of currencies) at a mid-point of 9.66 shillings per SDR, then equal to 8.16 per dollar, an effective devaluation of 12.5 per cent. This valuation remained in effect until the end of 1978. The average exchange rate (shillings per U.S. dollar) was 7.0214 in 1973; 7.1350 in 1974; 7.4135 in 1975; 8.3793 in 1976; 8.2740 in 1977; 7.6893 in 1978. From January 1979 the shilling's value was linked to another "basket" of currencies, an effective devaluation of about 10 per cent. TRADE UNIONS

Minimum wages are controlled by law and there is also compulsory arbitration under the Trades Disputes (Settlement) Act. This Act makes strikes and lockouts illegal unless the statutory conciliation procedure has been followed. In 1964 the existing 13 trade unions were dissolved by legislation and the National Union of Tanganyika Workers (NUTA) was substituted. This was re-organized to embrace Zanzibar trade union activity as the Union of Tanzania Workers (JUWATA). The first National Conference was held in May 1979.

Union of Tanzania Workers (JUWATA): Dar es Salaam; f. 1978; sole Trade Union organization; affiliated to OATUU; 350,000 mems. (1979); Sec.-Gen. JOSEPH C. RVEGASIRA; Deputy Sec.-Gens. ELIAS J. MASHASI, SHABAN HAMISI MLOO.

CO-OPERATIVES

The co-operative movement plays a central role in the Tanzanian economy, acting as middleman between farmers and the marketing boards which buy most of the country's agricultural produce. The movement has made considerable incursions into the transport, distribution and retail trade. Under "Operation Maduka", begun in 1976, it is planned to replace private shops in or near State farms, industries and ujamaa villages by co-operatives. In 1976 there were 879 co-operative shops and 2,191 ujamaa shops. The co-operatives obtain their trade commodities from the importing agencies which are mostly now parastatal organizations.

The movement is composed of some 1,670 primary marketing societies under the aegis of about 20 regional co-operative unions. The Co-operative Union of Tanganyika is the national organization (affiliated with the ruling CCM party) to which all unions belong.

Co-operative Development Office: Zanzibar; f. 1952; encourages and develops co-operative societies.

NYIRENDA; Regional Man. (Tanzania) R. S. SEME; Regional Man. (Zambia) J. KASONO.

ROADS

Tanzania has about 46,000 km. of roads, of which 17,000 km. are major roads. Many minor roads are impassable in the wet season. Work was to begin in 1977 on a road to link the port of Dar es Salaam and the Tanzam Highway. The "unity bridge" to Mozambique was to be completed in 1977 and there are plans to build ten bridges, including two each to Zanzibar and Burundi.

Zanzibar has 619 km. of road, of which 442 km. are bitumen surfaced, and Pemba has 363 km., 130 of which are bitumen surfaced. A road has been built between Zambia and Tanzania with aid from U.S.A., the World Bank Group and the Government of Sweden.

INLAND WATERWAYS

Lake marine services operate on Lakes Tanganyika and Victoria. Steamers connect with Kenya, Uganda, Zaire, Burundi and Zambia. A joint shipping company was formed with Burundi in 1976, to operate services on Lake Tanganyika.

THAILAND

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Kingdom of Thailand is situated in South-East Asia and extends far south down the narrow Kra peninsula to Malaya (Peninsular Malaysia). It is bordered to the west and north by Burma, to the north-east by Laos and to the south-east by Kampuchea. The climate is tropical and humid with an average temperature of 29°C (85°F). The language is Thai. Hinayana Buddhism is the predominant religion and there are a number of Muslim Malays to the south. There is a Christian minority, mainly in Bangkok and the north. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) has horizontal stripes of red, white, blue, white and red, the central blue stripe being twice the width of the others. The capital is Bangkok.

Recent History

Formerly known as Siam, Thailand took its present name in 1939. The army seized power in a coup in 1947 and Field Marshal Pibul Songgram took control. His influence declined during the 1950s and he was overthrown in 1957 in a bloodless coup led by Field Marshal Sarit Thanarat. Elections were held but in 1958 martial law was declared and all political parties dissolved. Following the death of Sarit in 1963, Gen. (later Field Marshal) Thanom Kittikachorn became Prime Minister. A constitution was introduced in June 1968 but in November 1971, following a rise in communist insurgency and internal political unrest, Field Marshal Thanom annulled the constitution, dissolved the National Assembly and declared martial law. Student riots, culminating in bloodshed, brought down the Government in October 1973. An interim government was formed under Dr. Sanya Dharmasakti, and a new constitution was promulgated in October 1974. Political parties were legalized and in January 1975 42 parties took part in free elections for the new House of Representatives. A coalition government formed in February by the Democratic Party leader, Seni Pramroj, was brought down by a vote of "no confidence" in March 1975.

A new right-wing coalition government, headed by the Social Action Party (SAP) leader, Kukrit Pramroj (brother of Seni), was unable to maintain its unity and Kukrit resigned in January 1976. General elections held in April resulted in the formation of a four-party coalition, with Seni as Prime Minister, but following violent student demonstrations in October, the Seni Government was dissolved and a right-wing military junta led by Admiral Sa'ngad Chaloryoo seized power, calling itself the National Administrative Reform Council (NARC). Martial law was declared, the 1974 constitution annulled, the legislature dissolved, political parties banned and strict press censorship imposed. A new constitution was promulgated and a new civilian cabinet announced, with Thanin Kraivixien as Prime Minister.

In October 1977 the Thanin Government was overthrown in a bloodless coup led by the same group of military leaders that had brought it to power. The 1976 constitution was abrogated. In November an interim constitution was promulgated. The King appointed a new Prime Minister, Gen. Kriangsak Chomanan, Supreme Commander of the Armed Forces and Secretary-General of the National Policy Council (NPC), formerly the Revolutionary Council which took control after the coup, and nominated a National Legislative Assembly (NLA) on the advice of the NPC's chairman. In December 1978 the NLA approved a new Constitution (see below under Government). The ban on political gatherings, imposed in 1976, was lifted in January 1979, and elections to a new House of Representatives were held in April. The nominated members of the Senate, appointed on the Prime Minister's recommendation, were almost all military officers. Thus Gen. Kriangsak remained Prime Minister and formed a new Council of Ministers, after which the NPC was dissolved. The Council of Ministers underwent a major reshuffle in February 1980 in an attempt to alleviate increasing political tensions. Opposition to Gen. Kriangsak continued, however, and in March 1980 he resigned. The Defence Minister, Gen. Prem Tinsulanonda, was appointed Prime Minister and a new Council of Ministers formed.

Following a cabinet crisis in March 1981, arising from a dispute between the SAP and the Thai Nation Party over alleged corruption in the negotiation of oil contracts, and the resignation of 13 ministers, Gen. Prem formed a new coalition government excluding members of the SAP. General Prem's leadership lacked authority, however, and in April 1981 an abortive coup was staged by a group of disillusioned army colonels, led by Gen. Sant Chitpatima. The bloodless coup attempt ended after three days, when the King publicly confirmed his support for Gen. Prem and, following strong opposition, nearly all the rebels surrendered. They were later freed but dismissed from their army positions. In December 1981 Gen. Prem carried out a ministerial reshuffle, reincorporating the SAP in order to bolster the shaky coalition and beat off a challenge from the new National Democracy Party set up by the former Prime Minister, Gen. Kriangsak, who has considerable support among politicians. The next general election is scheduled for April 1983.

In foreign policy during the 1960s, close to the battleground in Indochina, Thailand committed itself to the U.S. camp. After 1975, however, Thailand sought closer ties with its communist neighbours. Following the Vietnamese invasion of Kampuchea in December 1978, relations deteriorated considerably, as the Thai Government continued to recognize the regime of Pol Pot in Kampuchea and joined the other ASEAN countries in condemning the presence of foreign forces there.

In 1980 there was no improvement in relations, with the Kampuchean border refugee camps the centre of mutual recriminations (see Kampuchea, p. 692). In June a scheme for the voluntary repatriation of Kampuchean refugees was interpreted as a move to return Khmer Rouge soldiers to disrupt the new Kampuchean regime, and a military incursion by the Vietnamese into Thailand followed. In the September UN vote on Kampuchea, Thailand continued to support the exiled Khmer Rouge regime, but there is growing interest among the ASEAN countries in recognizing the regime in Phnom-Penh, in return for a removal of Vietnamese forces from Kampuchea. Owing to the proximity of the fighting between Khmer Rouge guerrillas and Vietnamese troops, Thai forces are continuously on alert at the Kampuchean border. In November 1981 Thailand stopped all aid to Vietnamese refugees entering the country from Kampuchea. Thailand continues to maintain a fine balance in its relations with Vietnam and the People's Republic of China, which supports the Khmer Rouge. Thailand has strengthened its links with the U.S.A., which promises military and economic assistance.

Government

Under the terms of the constitution promulgated in December 1978, the King is Head of State and Head of the Thai Armed Forces. The King appoints the Prime Minister, on the advice of the National Assembly, and the Council of Ministers, on the advice of the Prime Minister. The King may dismiss members of the Council of Ministers on the advice of the Prime Minister. The bicameral National Assembly comprises a House of Representatives, containing 301 members elected by universal adult suffrage for four years (subject to dissolution), and a Senate appointed for a six-year term by the King on the recommendation of the incumbent Prime Minister. Martial law was declared in October 1976 and remained in force in 1981, although some martial law powers had been relaxed.

Defence

The armed forces totalled 238,100 in July 1981: army 160,000, navy 35,000, air force 43,100. There are paramilitary forces of 44,500. Military service lasts two years between the ages of 21 and 30. In 1981 defence expenditure amounted to 26,200 million baht.

Economic Affairs

Over a quarter of the total area of the country is under cultivation and in 1980 agriculture accounted for 25 per cent of G.D.P. and employed 76 per cent of the working population. The principal crop is rice, of which Thailand is one of the world's main exporters. In 1980 production of paddy rice totalled 16.6 million metric tons, providing the country with an exportable surplus worth 19,505 million baht, making rice Thailand's largest export earner, followed by rubber and cassava (tapioca) products. Other important crops include maize, sugar cane and kenaf.

The manufacturing sector accounted for about 20 per cent of G.D.P. in 1980. The principal industries are textiles, cement, sugar and petroleum refining. The small mining sector contributed 1.6 per cent of G.D.P. in 1980. The most valuable mineral is tin, of which Thailand is the world's second largest producer (after Malaysia). Tin accounts for about 80 per cent of total mining production, but fluorite, lignite, gypsum, zinc, manganese, tungsten, lead and antimony are also mined. Petroleum has been discovered in the west of the country; large reserves of natural gas have also been found and were ready for commercial use in 1981. An increased capacity is expected in 1982. The gas will reduce the country's dependence on oil.

Despite government measures introduced early in 1978 to restrict import growth and reduce the balance of payments deficit, the trade deficit reached a record 47,053 million baht in 1979, rising to 65,000 million baht in 1980, partly due to the 60,000 million baht spent on petroleum imports. However, G.D.P. grew in real terms by 10.1 per cent in 1978, 6.0 per cent in 1979 and 6.3 per cent in 1980. The persistent deficit on current payments is partly offset by inflows of foreign capital. In July 1981 the baht was devalued by 8.7 per cent in an attempt to reduce the current account deficit.

The Fifth National Economic and Social Development Plan (1982-86) aims to promote small industries, placing emphasis on agriculturally-based and light manufacturing concerns. The Plan also stresses the need to improve the conditions of the many people living below the poverty level. In May 1980 a new scheme was introduced, inviting foreign multinational companies to invest unchecked in sectors previously limited to the Thai public sector. Several large loans have been granted, particularly from Japan and Europe. Thailand gained 40 per cent more foreign aid in 1981 and is progressing with several development projects.

Transport and Communications

There were 3,855 km. of state railways in 1981. Thailand had 28,240.6 km. of main and secondary roads at the end of 1981. The new Bangkok overhead expressway was completed in 1981, at a cost of nearly 1,100 million baht. Two additional expressways are also planned. There is an extensive network of canals providing transport for bulk goods. The port of Bangkok is an important ocean junction in South-East Asia. A large-scale development of two main ports is due to be completed in 1986. Don Muang airport, near Bangkok and Chiangmai and Haadyai airports are of international standards and there is a domestic airport at Phuket.

Social Welfare

Social services carried out by the Department of Public Welfare include child welfare, family assistance, welfare for the aged, the disabled, the destitute and socially handicapped women, disaster relief, welfare and development programmes for the hill tribes and self-help land settlements. In 1978 Thailand had nearly 400 hospitals and several thousand clinics, and in 1975 there were 5,000 physicians.

Education

Education between the ages of 7 and 15 is compulsory, wherever possible. In 1977 there were 31,651 primary and secondary schools and 2,554 private schools, with about 337,000 teachers and 8.2 million students. There are 23 universities. In 1979 adult illiteracy averaged 14.3 per cent, compared with 21.3 per cent in 1970.

Tourism

Thailand is noted for its temples, palaces and pagodas. The Royal Palaces of Bangkok are world famous. The number of tourists in 1980 was 1,858,801 and tourist expenditure totalled about 17,765 million baht. Tourism is the country's third largest source of foreign exchange.

Public Holidays

1982: May 5th (Coronation Day), May 7th (Ploughing Ceremony), May 19th (Wisakha Buja), July 5th (Asalha-buja), July 6th (beginning of Buddhist Lent), August 12th (The Queen's Birthday), October 23rd (Chulalongkorn Day), December 5th (The King's Birthday—National Day), December 10th (Constitution Day), December 31st (New Year's Eve).

1983: January 1st (New Year's Day). March/April*
(Makha Buja, Chakri Day and Songkran Day).

* Regulated by the Buddhist calendar.

Weights and Measures

The metric system is in force, but a number of traditional measures are also used.

Currency and Exchange Rates

100 satangs=1 baht.

Exchange rates (December 1981):

£1 sterling=44.24 baht;

U.S. $1= 23.00 baht.

100 satangs=1 baht.

Coins: ½, 1, 5, 10, 20, 25 and 50 satangs; 1 and 5 baht.

Notes: 50 satangs; 1, 5, 10, 20, 100 and 500 baht.

Note: From October 1963 to July 1973 the official exchange rate was U.S. $1=20.80 baht (1 baht=4.8077 U.S. cents). In July 1973 the par value of the baht was fixed at 5 U.S. cents ($1=20.00 baht) but in March 1978 the direct link with the U.S. dollar was ended and the baht pegged to a "basket" of the currencies of Thailand's main trading partners. The market rate was fixed at $1=20.375 baht (1 baht=4.9080 U.S. cents) until October 1975 and at $1=20.40 baht (1 baht=4.9020 U.S. cents) from November 1975 to August 1978. Thereafter the rate was adjusted frequently, although remaining fairly stable, until July 1981, when the currency was devalued from 21.0 to 23.0 per U.S. dollar. The average rate (baht per U.S. dollar) was: 20.379 in 1975; 20.336 in 1978; 20.419 in 1979; 20.476 in 1980. In terms of sterling, the exchange rate was £1=49.92 baht from November 1967 to August 1971; and £1=54.20 baht from December 1971 to June 1972.

THE CONSTITUTION

The Constitution of Thailand was promulgated on December 22nd, 1978, and consists of 11 provisions and 206 sections. A summary of the main provisions follows.

The King

Thailand is a Kingdom, one and indivisible. The King is Head of State and is head of the armed forces. Sovereignty rests with the people and the King exercises such power only in conformity with the provisions of the Constitution. The King exercises legislative power through the National Assembly, executive power through the Council of Ministers and judicial power through the courts. The person of the King is sacred and shall not be violated, accused or sued in any way. The King appoints the President of the Privy Council and not more than 14 other Privy Councilors. The Privy Council has the duty to advise the King on all matters pertaining to his functions.

The National Assembly

The National Assembly has the duty to consider and approve Bills. The Assembly is a bicameral legislature, with 225 members of the Senate appointed by the King on the recommendation of the incumbent Prime Minister and 301 members of the House of Representatives elected by the people. A Senator must have Thai nationality by birth and be 35 years of age or older and his term of office is six years. A Senator must not be a member of any political party. A Representative must be a Thai national by birth and be 25 years of age or older and a member of a political party. His term of office is four years. The King may dissolve the House of Representatives for a new election of members to the House. Members of the Senate and the House of Representatives are immune from prosecution in voting or expressing opinions during sittings of the National Assembly. At a sitting of the Senate or the House of Representatives, the presence of not less than one-half of the total number of members of each House is required to constitute a quorum. The President of the Senate acts as President of the National Assembly. The Assembly is vested with the power to control the administration of state affairs.

The Council of Ministers

The King appoints a Prime Minister, the Royal Command being countersigned by the President of the National Assembly. He also appoints not more than 44 Ministers to constitute the Council of Ministers on the advice of the Prime Minister. The King may remove a Minister on the advice of the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister and Ministers may not hold a permanent position in the National Assembly nor hold any position in a private undertaking which operates its business for profit. The Prime Minister and Ministers may speak at meetings of the National Assembly but may not vote.

Emergency Powers

The King may enact Royal Decrees which are not contrary to law. All laws and royal commands relating to state affairs must be countersigned by the Prime Minister or a Minister. In case of an emergency when there is an urgent necessity to maintain national or public safety or national economic security or to avert public calamity, the King may issue an emergency decree which shall have the force of an Act. The emergency decree shall be submitted by the Council of Ministers to the National Assembly as soon as possible. If it is approved, it shall continue in force; if not, it shall lapse.

Other Provisions

Judges are independent in the trial and adjudication of cases in accordance with the law. In the case where there is a dispute on the jurisdiction between the Court of Justice and any other Court, or between other Courts, the Constitutional Tribunal shall decide it.

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

Ministry of Justice: Rajinee Rd., Bangkok 2.

COURTS OF FIRST INSTANCE

Magistrates' Courts (Sarn Kwaeng): Function is to dispose of small cases with minimum formality and expense. Judges sit singly.

Juvenile Courts (Sarn Kadee Dek Lae Yaowachon): original jurisdiction over juvenile delinquency and matters affecting children and young persons. One judge and one woman associate judge form a quorum. There are four courts in Bangkok, Songkla, Nakhon Ratchasima and Chiangmai.

Civil Court (Sarn Paeng): Court of general original jurisdiction in civil and bankruptcy cases in Bangkok and Thonburi. Two judges form a quorum.

Criminal Court (Sarn Aya): Court of general original jurisdiction in criminal cases in Bangkok. Two judges form a quorum.

Provincial Courts (Sarn Changwad): Exercise unlimited original jurisdiction in all civil and criminal matters, including bankruptcy, within its own district which is generally the province itself. Two judges form a quorum. At each of the five Provincial Courts in the South of Thailand where the majority of the population are Muslims (i.e. Pattani, Yala, Betong, Satun and Nara-thiwat), there are two Dalo Yutithum or Kadis (Muslim judges). A Kadi sits with two trial judges in order to administer Islamic laws and usages in civil cases involving family and inheritance where all parties concerned are Muslims. Questions on Islamic laws and usages which are interpreted by a Kadi are final.

There is also a Labour Court to rule in cases of labour disputes.

COURT OF APPEALS

Sarn Uthorn: Appellate jurisdiction in all civil, bankruptcy and criminal matters; appeals from all the Courts of First Instance throughout the country come to this Court. Two judges form a quorum.

SUPREME COURT

Sarn Dika: The final court of appeal in all civil, bankruptcy and criminal cases. The quorum in the Supreme Court consists of three judges. The Court sits in plenary session occasionally to determine cases of exceptional importance, when the judges disagree or cases where there are reasons for reconsideration or overruling of its own precedents. The quorum for the full Court is half the total number of judges in the Supreme Court.

RELIGION

Buddhism is the prevailing religion. Besides Buddhists, there are some Muslim Malays. Most of the immigrant Chinese are Confucians.

There is also a small number of Christians, mainly in Bangkok and Northern Thailand.

TOGO

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Togolese Republic lies on the coast of West Africa, forming a narrow strip stretching north to Upper Volta with Ghana to the west and Benin to the east. The climate is hot and humid, temperatures averaging 27°C (81°F) on the coast and 30°C (86°F) in the drier north. The official languages are French, Kabiye and Ewe. The majority of the population follow animist beliefs; about 25 per cent are Christians and 7.5 per cent Muslims. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) has five stripes of alternate green and yellow, with a square red canton, containing a five-pointed star, in the upper hoist. The capital is Lomé.

Recent History

Formerly a United Nations Trust Territory administered by France, Togo became an autonomous republic within the French Union in 1956 and achieved independence on April 27th, 1960.

The leading political figure and first President of Togo, Sylvanus Olympio, was assassinated by military insurgents early in 1963 and Nicolas Grunitzky returned from exile to become President. In May 1963 a popular referendum approved his appointment and elected a new National Assembly from a single list of candidates. President Grunitzky was overthrown in January 1967 by an army coup d'état, led by Lt.-Col. (later Gen.) Étienne Gnassingbe Eyadéma. The National Assembly was dissolved and the Constitution abolished, and in April 1967 Eyadéma took over the Presidency. In the same year all political parties were dissolved. A new ruling party, the Rassemblement du peuple togolais (RPT), was founded in 1969 with Gen. Eyadéma as President. His personality has been a focus of national unity and stability, while equal participation by the main ethnic groups in the RPT has largely defused long-standing regional rivalry. A referendum held in January 1972 produced a massive vote of support for the President. The President repeatedly announced his intention to return Togo to civilian rule, despite continuing public support for the army. At the RPT congress in November 1976 it was established that the Political Bureau was superior to the Government and a substantial government reshuffle in January 1977 left Gen. Eyadéma as sole representative of the military in the Cabinet.

In October 1977 a mercenary coup, attempting to overthrow President Eyadéma, was foiled. Following a trial in Lomé in August 1979, ten men were sentenced to death, eight of them in absentia; the sentences were subsequently repealed by the President.

In Togo's first elections for 16 years, held on December 30th, 1979, Gen. Eyadéma was elected Head of State; a proposed new Constitution was also endorsed and the list of 67 candidates for a single-party Assembly was unanimously approved by the electorate. In January 1980 the President proclaimed the "Third Republic".

Togo favours a broad association of African states on a basis of shared interests, to replace the present groupings determined by a shared colonial past. In 1975 Eyadéma played a leading part in the creation of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS), an organization of both former British and former French colonies. In March 1980 Togo joined the Union of African Parliaments (UPA). During 1980 the President took an active part in efforts to negotiate a peace settlement in Chad. In October 1981 Togo was elected to one of five non-permanent seats in the UN Security Council.

Government

Under the Constitution approved in December 1979, executive power is vested in the President, who is elected for seven years by universal adult suffrage. He presides over the Government and can dissolve the National Assembly, comprising 67 People's Representatives, directly elected for a five-year term. The Rassemblement du peuple togolais, the only political party in Togo, mobilizes support for the Government. The country is divided into four Regions, each administered by an appointed Inspector assisted by an elected council.

Defence

In July 1981 Togo's armed forces numbered about 3,600, including four infantry battalions and a small naval force. There were 1,500 men in paramilitary forces. Under military agreements with France, Togo is helped with training and equipment. The 1979 defence budget was U.S. $27.8 million.

Economic Affairs

Agriculture is the leading sector of the economy, engaging 80 per cent of the working population but providing less than 40 per cent of the G.D.P., while only 11 per cent of the land is cultivated. Agricultural development, referred to as the "Green Revolution", is regarded as a top priority in President Eyadéma's policies. The chief food crops are yams, millet, cassava and maize. Livestock breeding and fishing also contribute to the economy. The chief cash crops are coffee, cocoa, cotton, groundnuts and palm kernels. A five-year cocoa and coffee replanting scheme is being supported by the World Bank and the EEC, and will provide aid for 17,000 farmers. Agricultural production has declined in recent years and in 1977 there was a severe drought in the north, necessitating international famine relief programmes. The current development plan (1981-85) will concentrate on the diversification of products and small-scale irrigation projects, while pressing for self-sufficiency in foodstuffs. New industrial crops, such as soybeans, tobacco, sisal and sugar cane, are being introduced. Other rural projects include the expansion of tobacco production, improvement of stock-raising, reforestation and the improvement of cereals storage.

The industrial sector is small but growing. It comprises mainly the processing of agricultural produce and the production of consumer goods. A large-scale cement plant at Tabligbo began operations in 1980, but by the end of 1981 was failing to meet production targets. Likewise, an oil refinery, using petroleum from Nigeria, began production in 1978 but has not yet reached its full potential of 1 million tons per year. There are plans to expand the salt works and the cement factory and to undertake oil and mineral exploration. Iron ore deposits are estimated to be 1,000 million tons and feasibility studies are being carried out. A second textile factory and a sugar refinery are to be built, and a cotton mill was completed at Lama-Kara in 1980. A joint hydroelectric scheme with Benin, to generate power from the Mono river, is expected to irrigate 42,000 hectares.

Phosphates were discovered in Togo in 1952 and exports began in 1961. Togo's phosphate deposits, at Hahotoé and Kpogamé, are of exceptionally high quality and the mineral is the country's leading export, Togo being the world's fourth largest phosphate producer in 1979. High prices for the commodity in 1974 brought Togo's balance of payments into surplus and the Compagnie togolaise des mines du Bénin was nationalized. In 1978 phosphate exports earned U.S. $101 million, accounting for 40 per cent of export revenue. However, exports declined from 3 million tons in 1979 to 2 million tons in 1980 and production of phosphates fell in 1981, resulting in the closure of one of five treatment plants. Production of phosphoric acid and fertilizers from low-grade rock and slimes is being considered, and plant improvements to extract phosphates previously lost to the sea are expected to increase output. Low world prices and a declining demand for Togo's three main commodities, as well as debts arising from ambitious capital investment schemes in the early 1970s, have led to economic problems in recent years. Imports have increased steadily since independence, and Togo suffered a trade deficit of U.S. $30.2 million in 1978. An IMF stabilization plan, begun in 1979, imposed strict limits on foreign borrowing, and the current development plan aims at an industrial growth rate of 12.8 per cent per year and a balance of payments surplus by 1985.

Transport and Communications

There are 565 km. of railways, including three lines running inland from Lomé and a coastal line which joins with the Benin system. A rail link from the cement plant to the port at Lomé (80 km.) has been constructed with foreign aid. There are 7,450 km. of roads, of which about 2,513 km. are bituminized. In 1980 the north-south road was completed, which links Upper Volta, Niger and Mali with the sea at Lomé. Lomé is the major port, but phosphates are exported through a new port at Kpémé. There are several airfields in Togo, and an international airport at Lomé. A telecommunications centre was set up in 1978 and links Togo with other African countries, the U.S.A. and parts of Europe.

Social Welfare

Medical services are provided by the Government. In 1977 Togo had 61 hospital establishments, with 3,438 beds, and 128 physicians.

Education

Education has now reached 70 per cent of the population. The education budget for the period 1981-85 is 21,500 million francs CFA, reflecting Togo's literacy campaign. About half the schools provide free education and there are places for over 60 per cent of children of school age. Education is to become free and compulsory for children aged 2 to 15. Reforms announced in 1977 allocated funds for adult education and vocational training, and ended entrance examinations for secondary schools. Mission schools are important and educate almost half of the pupils. There is a university at Lomé and scholarships to French universities are available.

Tourism

Big game hunting and fishing are the main attractions. The number of tourists visiting Togo increased from 51,000 in 1974 to 75,000 in 1978 and 90,000 in 1980. A hotel of 400 rooms, completed in Lomé in 1980, brought the total number of rooms to 3,000.

TONGA

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Kingdom of Tonga comprises 170 islands and one temporary island in the south-west Pacific, about 400 miles (644 km.) east of Fiji. The Tonga (or Friendly) Islands are divided into three main groups: Vava'u, Ha'apai and Tongatapu. Only 36 of the islands are permanently inhabited. The climate is mild (16–21°C) for most of the year, though usually hotter (27°C) in December and January. The languages are Tongan, a Polynesian language, and English. Tongans are predominantly Christians of the Wesleyan faith, although there are some Roman Catholics and Anglicans. The flag (proportions 2 by 1) is red, with a rectangular white canton containing a red cross. The administrative capital is Nuku'alofa, on Tongatapu Island.

Recent History

The foundations of the constitutional monarchy were laid in the nineteenth century. The kingdom was neutral until 1900 when it became a British Protected State. The treaty establishing the Protectorate was revised in 1958 and 1967, giving Tonga increasing control over its affairs. Queen Salote, who came to the throne in 1918, died in December 1965. She was succeeded by her son, Prince Tupouto'a Tungi, who had been Prime Minister since 1949. He took the title of King Taufa'ahau Tupou IV and appointed his brother, Prince Fatafehi Tu'ipelehake, to be Prime Minister. Tonga achieved full independence, within the Commonwealth, on June 4th, 1970.

In May 1981 and March 1982 Tonga was struck by cyclones which caused extensive damage.

Government

Tonga is an hereditary monarchy. The King is Head of State and Head of Government. He appoints, and presides over, a Privy Council which acts as the national Cabinet. Apart from the King, the Council includes seven Ministers, appointed for life and led by the Prime Minister, and the Governors of Ha'apai and Vava'u. The unicameral Legislative Assembly comprises 23 members: the King, the Privy Council, seven hereditary nobles elected by their peers and seven representatives elected by literate adults (male voters must be tax-payers). Elected members hold office for three years. There are no political parties.

Defence

Tonga has its own defence force consisting of both regular and reserve units.

Economic Affairs

The majority of the islands have an inherently fertile soil and the economy is based mainly on agriculture, the two chief crops, coconuts and bananas, accounting for the bulk of Tonga's exports. Vanilla was introduced as a new cash crop and in 1979 it had become the third most important export. Agriculture employed 74 per cent of the working population in 1966. Tonga's third Five-Year Plan (1976–80) aimed at directing investment to the productive sector of the economy and at expanding the existing infrastructure. Tonga receives aid from the United Kingdom, New Zealand, Australia and the Asian Development Bank. In 1974 and 1977 the United Kingdom provided loans for development purposes totalling about $T2.4 million. As a signatory to the Lomé Convention since 1975, Tonga was granted an EEC loan of nearly $T1 million in 1977 to help stabilize export earnings. In 1977/78 Australia and New Zealand each provided aid amounting to $A1.2 million. A series of surveys for offshore mineral deposits resulted in the discovery of petroleum around Tongatapu in 1977, and there were hopes that test drilling would then start. Unemployment and inflation are major problems which have led to massive temporary migration (between 1974 and 1977 10,000 Tongans obtained entry visas to New Zealand).

Transport and Communications

There are 262 km. of metalled roads on the two largest islands, Tongatapu and Vava'u, and about 20 km. on both Ha'apai and 'Eua. All other roads are unsurfaced earth or coral and therefore suitable for motor traffic only in dry weather. The two main ports of entry are at Nuku'alofa (Tongatapu) and Neiafu (Vava'u), with two smaller ports at Pangai and Niuatoputapu. Regular cargo services are maintained by Pacific Navigation of Tonga Ltd. and by foreign shipping lines. Internal services are mainly provided by government-owned vessels. International flights operate through Fua'amotu airport, near the capital, and there are other limited landing facilities for light aircraft and seaplanes used on internal services.

Social Welfare

The Government operates three public hospitals and a number of dispensaries. A new hospital was built under the first Five-Year Development Plan. At the end of 1976 there were 28 physicians.

Education

Free state education is compulsory between the ages of 6 and 14, while the Government and other Commonwealth countries offer scholarship schemes enabling students to go abroad for higher education. In 1980 there were 159 primary and secondary schools, with 33,137 pupils. There are several technical and vocational schools and one teacher training college. Some degree courses are offered at the university division of 'Atenisi Institute.

Tourism

Tourism is expanding with government encouragement. The first Five-Year Development Plan provided Tonga with its first modern tourist hotel, and the second plan included the upgrading of Fua'amotu airport to medium jet standard. There were 53,106 visitors to the islands in 1980.

Public Holidays

1982: May 4th (H.R.H. the Crown Prince's Birthday), June 4th (Emancipation Day), July 4th (H.M. the King's Birthday), November 4th (Constitution Day), December 4th (Tupou I Day), December 25th, 26th (Christmas).

1983: January 1st (New Year's Day), April 1st–4th (Easter), April 25th (ANZAC Day).

Weights and Measures

In 1980 Tonga adopted the metric system of weights and measures in place of the imperial system.

TRINIDAD AND TOBAGO

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of Trinidad and Tobago consists of Trinidad, the southernmost of the Caribbean islands, and Tobago, which is 32 km. (20 miles) to the north-east. The climate is tropical with a dry season from January to May. Rainfall averages 163 cm. (64 inches) per year. Average daytime temperature is 29°C (84°F). The language is English. Most of the population are Christians with Roman Catholics as the largest single group. There are Hindu and Muslim communities. The national flag (proportions 5 by 3) is deep red, divided by a white-edged black diagonal stripe, running from upper left to lower right. The capital is Port of Spain.

Recent History

Trinidad and Tobago was formerly a British colonial possession. Elections to the Legislative Council in September 1956 were won by the newly-formed People's National Movement (PNM), led by Dr. Eric Williams, who became the colony's first Chief Minister in October. In 1958 the territory became a member of the newly established Federation of the West Indies and in the following year achieved full internal self-government. With the secession of Jamaica from the Federation in 1961, Trinidad and Tobago withdrew and the Federation collapsed. In August 1962 Trinidad and Tobago became independent, with Dr. Williams as Prime Minister, and in 1967 became a member of the Organization of American States. "Black Power" riots in April 1970 and a mutiny in the army, which lasted for six months, resulted in the declaration of a state of emergency; subsequent unrest culminated in guerrilla warfare. Against this background elections to the House of Representatives were held in May 1971, resulting in a complete victory for the PNM.

A new constitution came into effect in August 1976, making Trinidad and Tobago a republic within the Commonwealth and lowering the voting age to 18 years. The first parliamentary elections of the republic were held in September, resulting in the PNM's winning 24 of the 36 seats. The United Labour Front, a newly-formed party led by trade unionists, won 10 seats and the Democratic Action Congress (DAC) won the two Tobago seats. The former Governor-General, Ellis Clarke, was sworn in as the country's first President in December 1976.

A parliamentary resolution in 1977 to grant Tobago self-rule resulted, after long resistance from the Government, in the formation in 1980 of a Tobago House of Assembly with certain powers over its own finance, economic development and social services. A. N. R. Robinson, leader of the DAC and a former Minister of External Affairs, was elected its chairman.

In March 1981 Eric Williams died, having consistently refused to nominate a successor. The President selected George Chambers, a deputy leader of the PNM and Minister of Agriculture, to assume the leadership ad interim. At a special convention of the PNM in May Chambers was formally adopted as party leader and confirmed as Prime Minister. Despite speculation about the country's political future following Williams' demise, the PNM increased its majority in the House of Representatives by two seats in a general election in November. The ULF, the DAC and the Tapia House Movement, campaigning jointly as the Trinidad and Tobago National Alliance, succeeded in retaining only 10 seats. The Organization for National Reconstruction, led by former PNM Minister Karl Hudson-Phillips, emerged as the only serious threat to the PNM, gaining 22.3 per cent of the vote but no seats.

A series of unexplained fires and bombings, which began in 1980, continued into 1981, killing 13 people.

Government

Legislative power is vested in a Parliament, consisting of the Senate (31 members) and the House of Representatives (36 members). Representatives are elected for a five-year term by universal adult suffrage. The President is a constitutional head of state elected by an Electoral College of members of both the Senate and the House of Representatives. Members of the Senate are nominated by the President in consultation with, and on the advice of, the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition. The Cabinet has effective control of the Government and is responsible to Parliament. Tobago Island was granted its own House of Assembly in 1980.

Defence

There is a defence force of about 1,000 enlisted troops.

Economic Affairs

Petroleum is of paramount importance in Trinidad's economy, with around half of G.D.P., 90 per cent of export income and the major part of government revenue deriving from production and refining in 1979. In response to forecasts that, at the current rate of extraction, oil deposits will be near exhaustion by 1990, exploration by government and private companies is being intensified. After reaching a peak of 245,000 b.p.d. in 1977, average oil production slowed to 187,900 b.p.d. in 1981.

As the leading Caribbean oil producer, Trinidad has recently benefited from the worldwide increase in oil prices. The Government intends to use these revenues to offset inflation (17.5 per cent in 1980), and also for the longer-term purposes of creating jobs (there was 12 per cent unemployment in 1980) and economic restructuring; some 32 funds have been set up to this end. The Government owns the Trinidad and Tobago Oil Co. (TRINTOC), and has a majority shareholding in Trinidad-Tesoro Petroleum. Reserves of natural gas amount to 14,000,000 million standard cubic feet and, potentially, to 20,000,000 million s.c.f.; a pipeline has been built to transport the gas to the Point Lisas industrial estate for use in a number of planned industries. The first of these, the TRINGEN liquid ammonia plant, came on stream in late 1977, and an iron and steel works with a capacity of 900,000 metric tons went into production in mid-1981. Construction has begun on a methanol plant and a urea plant. Other projects include petrochemicals, fertilizers, furfural, an aluminium smelter, plastics and electronics. A liquefaction plant, which will convert surplus gas into an exportable form, is also planned. It is hoped that these industries will be well established by the time that revenue from petroleum begins to fall.

Tourism is the second largest source of foreign exchange. The manufacture of sugar, rum, molasses, fruit juices and cotton textiles is also important, and Trinidad is a major world producer of asphalt. The sugar industry is in serious decline; heavy rains reduced the 1981 crop to 88,420 tons. The Government has established a Food and Agriculture Corporation. A series of "Government-to-Government" agreements, the aim of which is to import technical and managerial expertise for major development projects, have been signed with foreign governments. A 25-year development plan, designed to promote agriculture and fisheries and diversify Trinidad's industrial base, was announced at the end of 1980. Trinidad has established its own Caribbean Aid Council and in 1979 its regional aid contribution amounted to 2.2 per cent of G.D.P.

With the effects of a rise in G.D.P. of 22 per cent considerably eroded by inflation in 1980, Trinidad experienced an unusual amount of labour unrest throughout the economy in 1980 and 1981. The trade deficit (exclusive of petroleum) was expected to increase sharply in 1981, threatening to absorb the balance of payments surplus earned by petroleum within a few years if unchecked.

Transport and Communications

Road transport is widely used for passengers and freight and there are many buses and lorries. In 1977 there were 7,080 km. (4,400 miles) of roads, of which 3,060 km. (1,900 miles) were classified as major roads and 4,020 km. (2,500 miles) as local roads. A major road-building programme is under way. Port of Spain and Scarborough, Tobago, have a deep-water wharf and there are regular sailings to all parts of the world from Port of Spain. A special container berth, with two large overhead cranes, has been built at Port of Spain. Improvement in the car-ferry service linking Trinidad and Tobago is under consideration. Numerous airlines use Piarco international airport. An air shuttle service between Trinidad and Tobago is planned.

Social Welfare

Old age pensions are paid, and there is some unemployment relief. In 1977 there were 15 hospitals, with 4,455 beds, and the country had 618 physicians. State medical services are free. In April 1972 the National Insurance System was inaugurated. The system is run by an independent board and its provisions are similar to those contained in the British system introduced in 1948. Other social services introduced in the 1978 budget include a food stamp programme designed to benefit the aged and recipients of social assistance.

Education

Primary and secondary education is free and attendance is compulsory between the ages of 6 and 12. Entrance to secondary schools is determined by the Common Entrance Examination. The junior secondary school system for 12-14 year olds was introduced in 1972. Many schools are run jointly by the state and religious bodies. The Trinidad campus of the University of the West Indies is at St. Augustine, and includes an engineering faculty. Other institutions of higher education are the Polytechnic Institute and the East Caribbean Farm Institute. There are three teacher training colleges and three government technical institutes and vocational centres.

Tourism

The climate and coastline of both Trinidad and Tobago attract visitors mainly from the U.S.A., Canada and the CARICOM territories. The annual carnival festival is a major attraction. There were 190,060 foreign visitors in 1979.

Public Holidays

1982: May 31st (Whit Monday), June 10th (Corpus Christi), June 19th (Labour Day), July 23rd (Eid ul Fitr), August 2nd (Caribbean Day), August 4th (Discovery Day), August 31st (Independence Day), September 24th (Republic Day), October 16th (Divali), December 25th, 26th (Christmas).

1983: January 1st (New Year's Day), April 1st-4th (Easter).

Weights and Measures

The imperial system of weights and measures is in force. The metric system is being introduced.

FINANCE

100 cents = 1 Trinidad and Tobago dollar (TT $).

Coins: 1, 5, 10, 25 and 50 cents; 1 dollar.

Notes: 1, 5, 10, 20 and 100 dollars.

TT $100 = £21.58 = U.S. $41.51.

Note: The Trinidad and Tobago dollar was introduced in February 1965, replacing (at par) the West Indian dollar. The prevailing exchange rate of £1 = 4.80 dollars continued to operate until May 1976. In terms of U.S. currency, the exchange rate was U.S. $1 = TT $2.00 (TT $1 = 50.00 U.S. cents) from November 1967 to August 1971; and U.S. $1 = TT $1.8421 (TT $1 = 54.286 U.S. cents) from December 1971 to June 1972. The average rates (TT $ per U.S. $) were: 1.959 in 1973; 2.053 in 1974; 2.170 in 1975. In May 1976 the link with sterling was broken and the currency pegged to the U.S. dollar, with the exchange rate set at U.S. $1 = TT $2.40. Between March and May 1980, and again from May 1981, this was adjusted to U.S. $1 = TT $2.409. The average rates (TT $ per U.S. $) were: 2.438 in 1976; 2.401 in 1980.

TUNISIA

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of Tunisia lies on the Mediterranean coast of Africa, bordered by Algeria to the west and Libya to the east. The climate is temperate on the coast, with winter rain, and hot and dry in the southern desert. Arabic is the official language and French is widely used. Islam is the state religion and embraces the vast majority of the population. There are Jewish, Roman Catholic, Greek Orthodox and Protestant minorities. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) is red, charged with a white disc containing a red crescent moon and a five-pointed red star. The capital is Tunis.

Recent History

Tunisia was formerly a monarchy, with the Bey of Tunis as head of state. It became a French protectorate in 1883. A campaign for independence was led by the Néo-Destour (New Constitution) Party, founded in 1934 by Habib Bourguiba and renamed the Parti Socialiste Destourien (PSD) in 1964. France granted internal self-government in September 1955 and full independence on March 20th, 1956. Five days later elections were held for a Constitutional Assembly, which met in April and appointed Bourguiba to be Prime Minister. In July 1957 the Assembly deposed the Bey, abolished the monarchy and established a republic, with Bourguiba as President. A new constitution was promulgated in June 1959 and the first National Assembly elected in November. In 1961 Tunisian troops blockaded the French naval base at Bizerta and heavy fighting broke out. France agreed to evacuate the base in 1963. Although a one-party system was not institutionalized, the PSD was the only legal party between 1963 and 1981.

In May 1964 Tunisia appropriated all foreign-owned lands but the drive to collectivize agriculture had to be abandoned because of resistance from the rural population. In 1970 and 1971 the leading liberal figures in the Government, Bahi Ladgham, the Prime Minister and, Mahmoud Mestiri, the Minister of the Interior, were dismissed.

The President's hold on power was confirmed by a PSD congress and national elections in 1974. The constitution was altered to allow Bourguiba to become President-for-Life and to confirm the Prime Minister, Hedi Nouira, as his successor. President Bourguiba reacted harshly to student unrest and workers' strikes, both of which have been common since 1974; a further source of discontent has been the Government's refusal to allow the formation of political parties other than the PSD. A political confrontation developed between the Union Générale des Travailleurs Tunisiens (UGTT), led by Habib Achour, and the Government, which culminated in January 1978 with a 24-hour general strike, called by Achour in protest against the Government's labour policy and recent attacks on trade union offices. A state of emergency was declared and at least 50 people were killed in clashes between rioters and troops. About 200 union leaders, including Achour, were arrested; the trials, which took place in August and September, were widely condemned by outside observers but resulted in prison sentences for Achour and the other main defendants. Achour was pardoned by the President in 1979 but remained under house arrest until December 1981, when he was allowed to resume his position as Secretary-General of the UGTT.

At the PSD Congress in September 1979, Nouira rejected opposition demands for a multi-party system, but emphasized the need for "opening up" the PSD to accommodate different points of view and to encourage the participation of young people. Nouira was taken ill in February 1980, and was succeeded in April by the Minister of Education, Mohamed Mzali, as Prime Minister and (ex officio) as Bourguiba's successor. Subsequently, a more moderate policy became apparent with the release of trade unionists imprisoned in 1978 and the appointment of liberals to the Government.

The one-party system was ended in July 1981, when the Parti Communiste Tunisien (PCT) was officially recognized. President Bourguiba announced that any political group that gained 5 per cent of votes cast in the legislative elections in November would also be recognized as a party. The PCT, the Mouvement de l'Unité Populaire and the Mouvement des Démocrates Socialistes all protested against these conditions, and were subsequently defeated in a landslide victory by the Front National, a joint front presented by the PSD and UGTT, which gained 94.6 per cent of votes cast. The three other groups complained of "electoral irregularities".

Tunisian foreign policy is noted for its moderate position on the Israel question and for good relations with the U.S.A. In 1977 a dispute arose between Tunisia and Libya concerning the demarcation of the continental shelf in the Gulf of Gabès. In January 1980 the town of Gafsa was attacked by guerrillas. An opposition group claimed responsibility, but the Government accused Libya of being behind the attack.

Government

Under the 1959 Constitution, legislative power is held by the unicameral National Assembly, with 136 members elected by universal adult suffrage for five years. Between 1963 and 1981 Tunisia was a one-party state, although an amendment to the electoral code in 1979 allowed more than one candidate for each seat. Executive power is held by the President, elected for five years by popular vote at the same time as the Assembly. In March 1975 the Assembly proclaimed Habib Bourguiba President-for-Life. The President, who is Head of State and Head of Government, appoints a Council of Ministers, headed by a Prime Minister, which is responsible to him. For local administration the country is divided into 18 governorates.

Defence

In July 1981 total armed forces numbered 28,600, consisting of an army of 24,000, a navy of 2,600 and an air force of 2,000. There is a para-military force of 8,500. Officer-training is carried out in the U.S.A. and France as well as in Tunisia. Defence expenditure in 1981 totalled 104.4 million dinars.

Economic Affairs

Agriculture and mining are the bases of the economy. The chief agricultural products are wheat, barley, olive oil, wine, citrus fruit, vegetables and dates. Large quantities of dairy produce, cereals, meat and sugar still have to be imported. Market gardening and livestock breeding are being encouraged, as well as the development of irrigation. Between 1965 and 1969 a system of co-operative farming was promoted, but its failure has left agriculture divided into a large-scale modernized sector, both State and private, and a traditional sector of small peasant holdings. Rural depopulation is a serious problem as young people desert the country for the towns. A fishing programme involving investment of 10.4 million dinars was announced in 1981.

Phosphates and petroleum are the principal minerals. It was hoped that further discoveries of petroleum in 1981 would prevent the need for imports by 1990. Iron, zinc and lead are also mined, but iron reserves are dwindling. There are large offshore reserves of natural gas. Industry is based on the processing of the country's agricultural and mineral products. A law of April 1972 made the whole country a virtual Free Zone for foreign export-oriented industries. Major installations include a steel works, an oil refinery, a phosphate processing plant and cement works. The important textile industry was seriously affected by EEC import restrictions imposed in 1977, but was to be modernized under the 1982-86 Plan.

The dramatic rise in world prices of phosphates and petroleum in 1973/74 largely contributed to a doubling in value of Tunisia's exports in 1974. However, the value of imports also rose steeply. In 1975 exports fell, partly as a result of a decline in world demand for phosphates, but imports continued to increase in value; since then the trade deficit has continued to grow, reaching 500 million dinars in 1980, in spite of increased exports, but is partly offset by revenue from tourism and remittances from Tunisian workers abroad.

Tunisia has a serious unemployment problem, aggravated by a high rate of population increase, and a permanent balance of payments deficit. The Fifth Development Plan, for 1977-81, gave priority to increasing food production and creating employment, and achieved an average annual growth rate of 6.9 per cent. The Sixth Development Plan (1982-86) envisages total investment of 8,000 million dinars, of which 25 per cent is to be provided by foreign sources: Arab investment is being particularly encouraged and several joint investment banks are planned. The Plan again aims at self-sufficiency in food production and emphasizes the creation of jobs in the manufacturing sector. An overall growth rate of 6.3 per cent annually is envisaged.

Tunisia receives aid from western countries, international institutions and, for the first time in 1977, on international financial markets. The country became a partial associate of the EEC in 1969. After lengthy negotiations, a revised association agreement was signed in 1976.

Transport and Communications

The total length of railways was 2,013 km. in 1979, of which 1,534 km. were narrow-gauge. Construction of a city railway system was begun in Tunis in 1980. The 10,554 km. of main roads connect all the major commercial centres. There are four major ports and a special petroleum port at La Skhirra. A large new port at Gabès is being built. Air transport is provided by Tunis Air and several foreign lines; there are five international airports.

Social Welfare

A state system of social security provides benefits for sickness, maternity and old age. In 1979 Tunisia had 1,654 physicians and there were 95 government hospitals (with 13,449 beds) and 1,011 clinics and health centres. Free health services are available to 70 per cent of the population. Regional committees for social security care for the aged, needy and orphaned.

Education

Approximately 80 per cent of children of school age receive education in Tunisia, the majority in state-run schools. Arabic is the first language of instruction in primary schools but is gradually replaced by French in the higher grades.

Tourism

The main tourist attractions are the magnificent sandy beaches, oriental architecture and remains of the Roman Empire. Tunisia contains the site of the ancient city of Carthage. Tourism has expanded rapidly in Tunisia following extensive government investment in hotels, improved roads and other facilities. There were 1,602,100 visitors in 1980.

Public Holidays

1982: May 1st (Labour Day), June 1st (Victory Day), June 2nd (Youth Day), July 23rd (Id ul Fitr, end of Ramadan), July 25th (Republic Day), August 3rd (Birthday of President Bourguiba), August 13th (Women's Day), September 3rd (Commemoration of September 3rd, 1934), September 29th (Id ul Adha, Feast of the Sacrifice), October 15th (Evacuation of Bizerta), October 19th (Muslim New Year), December 28th (Mouloud, Birth of the Prophet).

FINANCE

1,000 millimes = 1 Tunisian dinar.

Coins: 1, 2, 5, 10, 20, 50, 100 and 500 millimes; 1 and 5 dinars.

Notes: 500 millimes; 1, 5 and 10 dinars.

Exchange rates (December 1981): £1 sterling = 983.7 millimes; U.S. $1 = 511.4 millimes.

100 Tunisian dinars = £101.66 = $195.54.

Note: The Tunisian dinar was introduced in November 1958, replacing the Tunisian franc (then at par with the old French franc) at the rate of 1 dinar = 1,000 francs. In August 1957 the exchange rate was fixed at $1 = 420 Tunisian francs, so the initial rate for the new currency was $1 = 420 millimes (1 dinar = $2.381). From December 1958 the relationship to French currency was 1 dinar = 1,175 old francs (11.75 new francs from January 1960). These rates remained in force until September 1964, when the dinar was devalued by 20 per cent. Between September 1964 and August 1971 the official exchange rate was $1 = 525 millimes (1 dinar = $1.905), with the dinar valued at 9.40 French francs until August 1969 and at 10.575 French francs thereafter. From December 1971 to February 1973 the par value was $1 = 483.55 millimes (1 dinar = $2.068). In terms of sterling, the exchange rate between November 1967 and June 1972 was £1 = 1.26 dinars. In February 1973 a new par value of $1 = 435.2 millimes (1 dinar = $2.298) was established but in March 1973 the French authorities ceased to maintain the franc-dollar rate within previously agreed margins. Tunisia retained its currency link with France, thus allowing its exchange rate against the dollar to vary widely from the par value. In January 1974 the Tunisian authorities announced that the franc-dinar rate would henceforth take into account the daily quotations of the Deutsche Mark in terms of francs on the Paris exchange market. The average market rates (dinars per U.S. dollar) were: 0.4772 in 1972; 0.4200 in 1973; 0.4365 in 1974; 0.4023 in 1975; 0.4288 in 1976; 0.4290 in 1977; 0.4162 in 1978; 0.4065 in 1979; 0.4050 in 1980.

THE CONSTITUTION

Tunisia, which had been a French Protectorate since 1883, achieved full internal autonomy in September 1955, and was finally recognized as a fully independent sovereign State by the Protocol of Paris of March 20th, 1956, by which France abrogated the former treaties and conventions.

NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

The Constitution was proclaimed by the Constituent Assembly on June 1st, 1959. Tunisia is a free, independent and sovereign republic. Legislative power is exercised by the National Assembly which is elected (at the same time as the President) every five years by direct universal suffrage. Every citizen who has had Tunisian nationality for at least five years and who has attained twenty years of age has the vote. The National Assembly shall hold two sessions every year, each session lasting not more than three months. Additional meetings may be held at the demand of the President or of a majority of the deputies.

HEAD OF STATE

The President of the Republic is both Head of State and Head of the Executive. He must be not less than 40 years of age. There is no limit to the number of terms a President may serve. The President is also the Commander-in-Chief of the army and makes both civil and military appointments. The Government may be censured by the National Assembly, in which case the President may dismiss the Assembly and hold fresh elections. If censured by the new Assembly thus elected, the Government must resign. Should the Presidency fall vacant for any reason before the end of a President's term of office, the Prime Minister shall assume the Presidency until the end of the term.

COUNCIL OF STATE

Comprises two judicial bodies: (1) an administrative body dealing with legal disputes between individuals and State or public bodies; (2) an audit office to verify the accounts of the State and submit reports.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

Deals with economic and social planning and studies projects submitted by the National Assembly. Members are grouped in seven categories representing various sections of the community.

TUVALU

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

Tuvalu is a scattered group of nine small atolls, extending 350 miles (560 km.) from north to south, in the western Pacific Ocean. Its nearest neighbours are Fiji to the south, Kiribati to the north and Solomon Islands to the west. The climate is warm and pleasant, with a mean annual temperature of 29°C (84°F), and there is very little seasonal variation. The average annual rainfall is 120 inches (3,000 mm.). The people speak Tuvaluan and English. They are almost entirely Christian, about 97 per cent being Protestant. The flag is light blue, with the United Kingdom flag as a canton in the upper hoist and nine white five-pointed stars (arranged to symbolize a map of the archipelago) in the fly. The capital is on Funafuti atoll.

Recent History

Tuvalu was formerly known as the Ellice (or Lagoon) Islands. Between about 1850 and 1875 many of the islanders were captured by slave-traders and this, together with European diseases, reduced the population from about 20,000 to 3,000. In 1877 the United Kingdom established the Western Pacific High Commission (WPHC), with its headquarters in Fiji, and the Ellice Islands and other groups were placed under its jurisdiction. In 1892 a British protectorate was declared over the Ellice Islands and the group was linked administratively with the Gilbert Islands to the north. In 1916 the United Kingdom annexed the protectorate, which was renamed the Gilbert and Ellice Islands Colony (GEIC). During the Japanese occupation of the Gilbert Islands in 1942-43, the administration of the GEIC was temporarily moved to Funafuti in the Ellice Islands. (For more details of the history of the GEIC, see the chapter on Kiribati, p. 723.)

A series of advisory and legislative bodies prepared the GEIC for self-government. In May 1974 the last of these, the Legislative Council, was replaced by a House of Assembly, with 28 elected members (including eight Ellice Islanders) and three official members. A Chief Minister was elected by the House and chose between four and six other Ministers, one of whom had to be from the Ellice Islands.

In January 1972 the appointment of a separate GEIC Governor, who assumed most of the functions previously exercised by the High Commissioner for the Western Pacific, increased the long-standing anxiety of the Ellice Islanders over their minority position as Polynesians in the colony, dominated by the Micronesians of the Gilbert Islands. In a referendum held in the Ellice Islands in August and September 1974, over 90 per cent of the voters favoured separate status for the group, and in October 1975 the Ellice Islands, under the old native name of Tuvalu ("eight standing together"), became a separate British dependency. The Deputy Governor of the GEIC took office as Her Majesty's Commissioner for Tuvalu. The eight Ellice representatives in the GEIC House of Assembly became the first elected members of the new Tuvalu House of Assembly. They elected one of their number, Toaripi Lauti, to be Chief Minister. Tuvalu was completely separated from the GEIC administration in January 1976. The remainder of the GEIC was renamed the Gilbert Islands and achieved independence, under the name of Kiribati, in July 1979.

Tuvalu's first separate elections were held in August 1977, when the number of elective seats in the House was increased to 12. An independence constitution was finalized at a conference in London in February 1978. After five months of internal self-government, Tuvalu became independent on October 1st, 1978, with Lauti as the first Prime Minister. Like Nauru, Tuvalu is a "special member" of the Commonwealth and is not represented at meetings of Heads of Government.

In April 1979 it was reported that Tuvalu had signed a treaty of friendship with the U.S.A., which renounced its claim, dating from 1856, to the four southernmost atolls. Following elections to the House of Assembly in September 1981, Dr. Tomasi Puapua became Prime Minister. The main election issue was the lack of information about government funds entrusted to a Californian businessman for investment in the U.S.A. soon after independence.

Government

Tuvalu is a constitutional monarchy. Executive authority is vested in the British sovereign, as Head of State, and is exercisable by her representative, the Governor-General, who is appointed on the recommendation of the Prime Minister and acts in almost all cases on the advice of the Cabinet. Legislative power is vested in the unicameral Parliament, with 12 members elected by universal adult suffrage for four years (subject to dissolution). The Cabinet is led by the Prime Minister, who is elected by and from the members of Parliament. On the Prime Minister's recommendation, other Ministers are appointed by the Governor-General. The Cabinet is responsible to Parliament. Each of the eight inhabited atolls has an elected Island Council which is responsible for local government.

Economic Affairs

Tuvalu is composed of coral atolls with poor quality soil. Most of the land is covered with coconut palms, which provide the only export in the form of copra. There is subsistence farming of coconuts, pigs and poultry but the lack of suitable grass has prevented cattle grazing. Small-scale fishing is carried out and it is hoped that, with the introduction of an exclusive economic zone extending 200 nautical miles (370 km.) from the coasts and covering about 500,000 square miles (1.3 million sq. km.) of sea, exploitation of fish resources can be developed to form the basis of the economy. Other foreign exchange is earned from the sale of postage stamps and remittances sent home by Tuvaluans working abroad, mainly in the phosphate industry on Nauru, or on foreign ships. About a quarter of the labour force was overseas in the 1970s. The United Kingdom agreed to continue financial assistance after independence with a $A4.7 million special development grant, $A4.9 million general development aid for three years and $A1.7 million budgetary aid for 1979/80. General development aid was extended in 1980 and budgetary aid of $A810,000 for 1981 and $A900,000 for 1982 was agreed.

Transport and Communications

Tuvalu has one airport and one shipping port of entry on Funafuti. There are no metalled roads.

Social Welfare

A 31-bed hospital was opened in 1975 on Funafuti and each inhabited atoll has a dispensary.

Education

Education is provided by the Government and all children receive primary education. In 1981 1,269 pupils attended the eight primary schools (one on each inhabited atoll), and 275 attended the secondary school on Vaitupu. Further training or vocational courses are available in Fiji and Kiribati.

Tourism

Because of their remoteness, the islands have attracted only a very small number of tourists. Tuvalu has only one hotel, on Funafuti.

Public Holidays

1982: June 14th (Queen's Official Birthday), August 2nd (first Monday in August), October 1st (Tuvalu Day), November 15th (for Prince of Wales's Birthday), December 25th-27th (Christmas).

1983: January 1st (New Year), March 9th (Commonwealth Day), April 4th (Easter Monday).

Currency and Exchange Rates

Australian currency: 100 cents=1 Australian dollar ($A).

Exchange rates (December 1981):

£1 sterling=$A1.6895;

U.S. $1=87.8 Australian cents.

STATISTICAL SURVEY

Land Area: 26 square km. (10 square miles).

Population: 7,349 at census of May 1979. In addition, there were about 2,000 Tuvaluans living overseas.

Labour Force: In 1979 there were 936 people in paid employment, 50 per cent of them in government service. In 1979 114 Tuvaluans were employed by the Nauru Phosphate Co., with a smaller number employed in Kiribati and about 255 on foreign ships.

FINANCE

Australian currency: 100 cents=1 Australian dollar ($A). Coins: 1, 2, 5, 10, 20 and 50 cents. Notes: 1, 2, 5, 10, 20 and 50 dollars.

In January 1977, Tuvaluan coinage of denominations 1, 2, 5, 10, 20 and 50 cents and 1 dollar was introduced. A 5-dollar piece was added in 1981. Australian notes and coins continue to circulate.

Exchange rates (December 1981): £1 sterling=$A1.6895; U.S. $1=87.8 Australian cents. $A100=£59.19=U.S. $113.93.

Note: For details of previous changes in the exchange rate, see the chapter on Kiribati.

Budget (1981): Expenditure $A2,820,390, of which $A810,000 was British grant-in-aid. The remainder, $A2,010,390, was expected to comprise personal tax revenue of $A160,000, customs duties of $A450,000, shipping fares and freights $A180,000 and philately $A515,600.

Development (1981): $A4.3 million derived from grant and loan funds from the United Kingdom, New Zealand, Australia, Canada, Japan, the Federal Republic of Germany, the EDF and UNDP.

In 1982 the Government planned to spend $A156,140 on social services and education, $A948,166 on commerce and natural resources, $A180,022 on communications and works.

THE CONSTITUTION

A new Constitution came into effect on October 1st, 1978, when Tuvalu became independent. The main provisions are set out below:

The Constitution states that Tuvalu is a democratic sovereign state and that the Constitution is the Supreme Law. It guarantees protection of all fundamental rights and freedoms and provides for the determination of citizenship.

The British sovereign is represented by the Governor-General who must be a citizen of Tuvalu and is appointed on the recommendation of the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister is elected by Parliament, and up to four other Ministers are appointed by the Governor-General from among the members of Parliament, after consultation with the Prime Minister. The Cabinet, which is directly responsible to Parliament, consists of the Prime Minister and the other Ministers whose functions are to advise the Governor-General upon the government of Tuvalu. The Attorney-General is the principal legal adviser to the Government. Parliament is composed of 12 members directly elected by universal adult suffrage for four years, subject to dissolution, and is presided over by a Speaker elected by the members. The Constitution also provides for the operation of a Judiciary (see Judicial System) and for an independent Public Service.

THE GOVERNMENTHEAD OF STATE

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

The Supreme Law is embodied in the Constitution. The High Court is the superior court of record, presided over by the Chief Justice, and has jurisdiction to hear appeals from judgments of the Magistrates' Courts and the Island Courts. Appeals from the High Court lie with the Court of Appeal in Fiji or, in the ultimate case, with the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the United Kingdom.

There are eight Island Courts with limited jurisdiction in criminal and civil cases.

TRANSPORT

Shipping: There is a deep-water lagoon at the port of entry, Funafuti, and irregular shipping services connect Tuvalu with Fiji and elsewhere. The Government operates one inter-island ship.

Civil Aviation: Air Pacific Ltd. (Fiji) maintains a thrice-weekly service between Fiji and Tuvalu. Air Tungaru (Kiribati) operates a weekly service between Tarawa and Funafuti. Sea Bee Air Ltd. of Auckland (New Zealand) operates, on behalf of the Government, an amphibian service between Funafuti and Nukulaelae, Nukufetau, Vaitupu, Nui and Nanumea.

UGANDA

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of Uganda is an equatorial country in East Africa, bordered by Sudan to the north, Zaire to the west, Kenya to the east and Rwanda, Tanzania and Lake Victoria to the south. The climate is tropical, with temperatures moderated by the altitude of the country, varying between 15° and 30°C. The official language is English and there are many local languages, the most important of which is Luganda. More than half the population follow Christian beliefs. There is a small Muslim minority. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) has six horizontal stripes: black, gold, red, black, gold and red. In the centre is a white disc containing a crested crane. The capital is Kampala.

Recent History

Formerly a British protectorate, Uganda became an independent member of the Commonwealth on October 9th, 1962. The Government was led by Dr. Milton Obote, leader of the Uganda People's Congress (UPC) since 1960 and Prime Minister since April 1962. At independence the country comprised four regions, including the kingdom of Buganda, which had federal status. Exactly a year after independence Uganda became a republic, with Mutesa II, Kabaka (King) of Buganda, as first President. Executive power remained with the Cabinet. By 1966 rivalry between the UPC and the followers of the Kabaka was intense, and in February Obote led a pre-emptive coup against the President. Heavy fighting followed his introduction of a provisional constitution in April, with himself as executive President, and the Kabaka fled to Britain, where he later died. In September 1967 a new definitive constitution was introduced, establishing a unitary republic, and Buganda was brought under control of the central government. After an assassination attempt on President Obote in December 1969, all opposition parties were banned.

President Obote was overthrown in January 1971 by the Army, led by Maj.-Gen. (later Field Marshal) Idi Amin Dada, who assumed full executive powers and suspended political activity. The National Assembly was dissolved in February, when Amin declared himself Head of State, took over legislative powers and suspended parts of the 1967 constitution. The beginning of Amin's rule was marked by the massacre of troops from Obote's Lango tribe and the Acholi. Dr. Obote fled to Tanzania, whose support for him led to disputes within the East African Community and clashes between Ugandan and Tanzanian troops on the border. In August 1972 Amin proclaimed an "economic war" to free Uganda from foreign domination, particularly that of Britain and of British Asians resident in Uganda, and the mass expulsion of non-citizen Asians strained relations with Britain. In September 1972 an attempted invasion of Uganda by supporters of Obote was repulsed.

In February 1976 Amin claimed that large areas of western Kenya were historically part of Uganda; the frontier was temporarily closed and a virulent propaganda campaign ensued. Conflict was only narrowly averted in July, after Amin (appointed "President for Life" in June) had accused Kenya of co-operating in an Israeli commando raid to free Jewish hostages from an airliner which was hijacked to Entebbe airport by pro-Palestinian guerrillas. The United Kingdom severed relations with Uganda over the murder of one of the hostages after the raid.

The ruthless elimination of suspected opponents, mass flights of refugees to neighbouring countries and periodic purges of the army, on whose support the regime depended, became a focus of world indignation when the Anglican Archbishop of Uganda and two cabinet ministers were murdered in February 1977. The National Consultative Forum, a large advisory assembly, held its first meeting in January 1978.

Uganda annexed the Kagera salient from Tanzania in November 1978. An invasion force consisting of Tanzanian regular troops and Ugandan exiles crossed into Uganda and rapidly gained control of the southern region. Amin's forces capitulated in spite of military aid and reinforcements from Libya, and in April 1979 a Tanzanian assault force entered Kampala, meeting little resistance. Sporadic fighting continued in northern Uganda but the remaining pro-Amin troops were defeated in June. A small-scale invasion of the West Nile District by alleged Amin supporters in October 1980 led to the devastation of the area and its main town, Arua.

A provisional government, the National Executive Council (NEC), was set up in April 1979 from the ranks of the Uganda National Liberation Front (UNLF), with Dr. Yusuf Lule as President. When Dr. Lule attempted to reshuffle the NEC in June, opposition from the National Consultative Council (NCC), a provisional parliament set up by the UNLF, and complaints to President Nyerere of Tanzania forced his resignation. Dr. Lule was succeeded by Godfrey Binaisa, who was in turn overthrown by the Military Commission of the UNLF in May 1980 after he had decided to allow only UNLF members to stand in the elections set for December 1980 and attempted to dismiss the Chief of the Ugandan Army, Brig. David Oyite Ojok, a prominent Obote supporter.

The Military Commission, under its Chairman, Paulo Muwanga, established an Electoral Commission to organize and supervise the national elections. Four parties contested the elections, which were won by the UPC, with Milton Obote becoming President again almost 10 years after being overthrown. However, the defeated parties, particularly the Democratic Party (DP) led by Paul Ssemogerere, complained of gross electoral malpractices by UPC supporters, both before and after voting, including: preventing the nomination of opponents of the UPC in 17 constituencies, and intervention by Muwanga (after the DP had claimed victory), who suspended the results and personally determined whether each individual election was valid. A team of Commonwealth observers made several criticisms of the conduct of the elections, but described them as "a valid electoral exercise".

The new Government, in which Muwanga was named Vice-President and Minister of Defence, could do little in its first year to quell the serious civil unrest which has continued unabated since before the downfall of Idi Amin. Violent incidents continued throughout 1981. Anti-Government guerrilla activity began in February, with a series of attacks on police and army installations. Hundreds of President Obote's opponents were subsequently detained, including DP members of the National Assembly, and several newspapers were banned. Following the withdrawal of Tanzanian troops in June, there were reports from the West Nile District (Amin's homeland) of further atrocities by mutinous Ugandan soldiers. There was renewed violence in Kampala in February 1982, when guerrillas attacked an army barracks.

Government

Following national elections held in December 1980, Uganda returned to a multi-party parliamentary system, under the 1967 Constitution, as subsequently amended, which the Court of Appeal declared to be valid in October 1980. Legislative power is vested in the National Assembly, with 136 members: 10 nominated to represent the armed forces and 126 directly elected by universal adult suffrage. The leader of the majority party becomes President.

Defence

An occupying force of some 20,000 members of the Tanzanian People's Defence Forces operated in Uganda after the defeat of President Amin's troops. Upon their final withdrawal in mid-1981, a force of 1,000 remained to assist with the training of the Ugandan army. In July 1981 Ugandan armed forces were estimated to number 7,500, but they remain highly undisciplined.

Economic Affairs

Agriculture, the most important sector of Uganda's economy, provides a livelihood for about 81 per cent of the population. The main food crops are plantains, cassava and cereals. The chief plantation and export crops are coffee (which in 1981 provided almost all export earnings), cotton, tea and tobacco. Copper is the most important mineral and is extracted from the mines at Kilembe; however, production was at a standstill in 1981, and the mines, along with cobalt deposits in spoil heaps, are to be developed by Falconbridge, a Canadian company. It was estimated in 1981 that industry was operating at only 15 per cent of capacity.

During the rule of President Amin all foreign-owned lands, sugar, tea, coffee and cotton industries and estates were nationalized without compensation. Non-citizen Asians, who had a prominent share in commerce, were expelled and their assets distributed among soldiers and military police. As a result, foreign aid dwindled. Since 1979, however, this policy has been reversed and foreign companies have taken an interest in reviving Ugandan agriculture and industry. Prominent Asian entrepreneurs have been welcomed back to Uganda.

During the 1970s there was virtually no real growth in Ugandan G.D.P. Production of important cash crops, such as tea, tobacco, cotton and sugar, had by the end of the decade declined to a fraction of their production at its beginning. In an effort to stimulate production, substantial increases in producer prices for export crops were announced in 1981. Many plantations require rehabilitation after being deserted during the terror of Amin's regime. Towards this purpose, in 1981 the World Bank made available an additional credit of U.S. $70 million. Coffee declined to an estimated production of 120,000 metric tons in 1979/80, resulting in a serious shortage of foreign exchange and "black market" dealings in foreign currencies. There was some improvement in 1980/81, however, when Uganda was able to meet its export quota of 1.9 million bags under the International Coffee Agreement.

Internal insecurity has hindered international efforts to ease the serious famine which has affected northern Uganda since 1979. Drought and cattle rustling have badly damaged the livestock industry, and 30,000 head of cattle were bought from Tanzania in 1980 to replenish herds.

The most immediate priority for President Obote's government was to restore international confidence in the country. In 1981 negotiations between President Obote, President Nyerere of Tanzania and President Moi of Kenya on the dispute over Ugandan debts and the assets of the East African Community, which was dissolved in 1977, made good progress. Improved relations with Kenya have removed barriers to the export of landlocked Ugandan coffee, which should ease the foreign exchange crisis. Other problems which the Government attempted to tackle in 1981 included the corruption of "black market" trading, in which basic foodstuffs are sold at exorbitant prices, and inflation which was running at 10 per cent a month. The "floating" of the shilling in June effectively led to a massive devaluation of the currency, but restored some stability to the economy. The IMF approved a standby loan of the equivalent of SDR112.5 million to support the Government's economic programme, and in addition granted SDR45 million to compensate for losses in commodity earnings.

Transport and Communications

Uganda had 1,286 km. of railways in 1980 and 6,987 km. of main roads in 1979. Many of the major roads are now in poor condition and a ban has been imposed on their use by vehicles weighing more than 35 metric tons from neighbouring countries. The transport system deteriorated after the expulsion by President Amin of the Asians, who had largely controlled it, and this has added to problems in the distribution of food. A rail wagon ferry service on Lake Victoria, linking Jinja with the Tanzanian port of Mwanza, was due to begin in late 1982. Air transport from Entebbe airport is provided by the Uganda Airlines Corporation and other lines. A satellite communications centre was opened at Arua in 1977.

Social Welfare

Benefits are available for industrial accidents, sickness and unemployment. A social security act was introduced in 1967. The health service was adversely affected by the departure of foreign personnel in 1972. In April 1973 President Amin banned doctors from leaving Uganda and in December 1974 banned doctors and dentists from having private practices. In 1975 Uganda had 420 hospitals, with 18,156 beds, and in 1977 there were 436 physicians.

Education

Education is sponsored by the Government and by missions, most schools being Government-financed or aided. In 1979 there were 1,223,850 pupils enrolled in primary schools and 66,730 in secondary schools. It is estimated that the proportion of children aged 6 to 11 years receiving primary education fell from 61 to 53 per cent between 1970 and 1975. Only about 4 per cent of children aged 12 to 17 were enrolled at secondary schools in 1975. The national university is Makerere University in Kampala, and there are plans to build an Islamic university.

Tourism

The forests, lakes and mountains are the main tourist features, but under President Amin's regime the tourist trade ceased. In 1979 plans to exploit Uganda's high tourist potential were introduced.

FINANCE

100 cents = 1 Uganda shilling.

Coins: 5, 10 and 50 cents; 1 shilling.

Notes: 5, 10, 20, 50 and 100 shillings.

Exchange rates (December 1981): £1 sterling = 150.0 Uganda shillings; U.S. $1 = 78.0 Uganda shillings.

1,000 Uganda shillings = £6.67 = $12.82.

Note: The Uganda shilling was introduced in August 1956, replacing (at par) the East African shilling, equal to one shilling sterling (£1 = 20 shillings). From September 1949 the shilling was equivalent to 14 U.S. cents (U.S. $1 = 7.143 shillings) and this valuation remained in force until July 1973. When the U.S. dollar was devalued in December 1971 the rate of Uganda shillings per IMF Special Drawing Right (SDR) was fixed at 7.755. In February 1973 the dollar was again devalued and the exchange rate became 1 SDR = 8.617 shillings. In July 1973 the currency was revalued by 5.5 per cent, with a new exchange rate of $1 = 6.90 shillings (1 SDR = 8.324 shillings), but in January 1974 the shilling was restored to its earlier valuation of 14 U.S. cents ($1 = 7.143 shillings). From July 1974 the fixed relationship between the SDR and the U.S. dollar was ended but the Uganda shilling remained tied to U.S. currency. This remained in force until October 1975, when the link between the shilling and the U.S. dollar was ended and the shilling's value tied to the SDR (based on a weighted "basket" of currencies) at a mid-point of 9.65 shillings per SDR, then equal to 8.16 per dollar, an effective devaluation of 12.5 per cent. In June 1981 the Uganda shilling was allowed to "float" and its value quickly fell by about 90 per cent. The average market rates (Uganda shillings per U.S. dollar) were: 7.021 in 1973; 7.136 in 1974; 7.412 in 1975; 8.368 in 1976; 8.266 in 1977; 7.692 in 1978; 7.469 in 1979; 7.424 in 1980. In terms of sterling, the value of the Uganda shilling between November 1957 and August 1971 was 1s. 2d. (5.85p), the exchange rate being £1 = 17.14 shillings; from December 1971 to June 1972 the rate was £1 = 18.61 shillings.

THE CONSTITUTION

According to the Constitution of September 8th, 1967, Uganda has an executive President who is Head of State, Leader of the Government and Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces. The Parliament is the supreme legislature, and consists of the President and a National Assembly of 82 elected members (raised to 126 in 1980). The Constitution provides for some specially elected members as may be required to give the party having the greatest numerical strength of elected members a majority of not more than ten of all the members of the National Assembly. The Constitution may be amended by a majority of not less than two-thirds of the National Assembly.

This Constitution was not revoked by President Amin, but in February 1971 he ordered the suspension of Uganda's legal system, and the concentration of legislative powers in his own hands, with the assistance of a Defence Council and a Council of Ministers nominated by him.

The Constitution appears to have been amended by the Military Commission of the Uganda National Liberation Front between May and December 1980. The Court of Appeal ruled in October 1980 that the 1967 Constitution, as amended, was still valid and elections were held on December 10th.

LEGISLATURE

NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

The Constitution provides for a National Assembly of 126 elected members. Uganda's first elected legislature since 1971 assembled on December 23rd, 1980. Ten additional members have been nominated to represent the Uganda National Liberation Army.

Speaker: FRANCIS BUTAGIRA.

ELECTION, DECEMBER 10TH, 1980.

PARTY	SEATS*
Democratic Party (DP)	51
Uganda Patriotic Movement (UPM)	1
Uganda People's Congress (UPC)	74†

* In January 1982 a total of seven DP members defected to the UPC.

† The 10 nominated members from the Uganda National Liberation Army also support the UPC.

POLITICAL PARTIES

Political activity outside the Uganda National Liberation Front, the broad coalition of former exiles and opponents of President Amin's regime, was banned in May 1979. After the Military Commission of the UNLF assumed executive power in a bloodless coup in May 1980, the ban on party-political activity was reversed. Four parties contested the national elections held in December 1980:

Conservative Party (CP): f. March 1979; led by J. MAYANJANKANGI, who was Prime Minister of the then Kingdom of Buganda from 1964-66; won no seats in 1980 elections.

Democratic Party (DP): Kampala; f. 1953; banned in 1969

when UPC created a one-party state; favours mixed economy and a national government; widespread support, particularly in southern Uganda; Leader PAUL SSEMOGERERE.

Uganda Patriotic Movement (UPM): Kampala; f. June 1980; supports creation of people's militia to end persistent violence; Leader YOWERI MUSEVENI; Sec.-Gen. BIDANDI SSALA.

Uganda People's Congress (UPC): Kampala; f. 1960; socialist-inclined party; ruling party 1962 to 1971, banned other political parties in 1969; returned to power after elections held in December 1980; Leader DR. APOLLO MILTON OBOTE.

TRANSPORT

RAILWAYS

Uganda Railways Corporation: Kampala; formed after the break-up of East African Railways in 1977; there were 1,286 km. of railways in 1980; Chair. OKELLO OJOK; Man. Dir. ATEKER EJALU.

ROADS

In 1979 there was a total road network of 27,901 km., including 6,987 km. of main roads.

INLAND WATERWAYS

A rail wagon ferry service connecting Jinja with the Tanzanian port of Tanga, via Mwanza, was due to begin in late 1982, thus reducing Uganda's dependence on the Kenyan port of Mombasa. A wagon ferry terminal at Port Bell, outside Kampala, is also planned.

CIVIL AVIATION

Uganda's international airport is at Entebbe, on the shores of Lake Victoria some 40 km. from Kampala. Distances within the country are too short for air transport to be used to advantage in general, but there are several small airstrips. A second international airport is being built at Arua.

Uganda Airlines Corporation: Airways House, 1 Kimathi Ave., P.O.B. 5740, Kampala; f. 1976; government-owned corpn.; scheduled cargo and passenger services to Burundi, Kenya, Rwanda, Tanzania, the United Arab Emirates, India, Belgium, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy and the United Kingdom; charter flights; fleet of 2 Boeing 707, 2 Fokker 27, 1 King Air 100; Chair. and Gen. Man. Col. G. W. TOKO.

The following foreign airlines also serve Uganda: Aero-flot (U.S.S.R.), Air Tanzania, Air Zaire, Alitalia, Ethiopian Airlines, Kenya Airways, Lufthansa (Federal Republic of Germany), Sabena (Belgium), SAS (Sweden) and Sudan Airways.

TOURISM

Uganda Tourism Development Corporation: P.O.B. 7211, Kampala; Man. Dir. J. J. OGWAPIT.

No tourists were permitted to enter Uganda between September 1972 and September 1973 and few have entered since the ban was lifted. A programme to revive the tourist industry was introduced in 1979.

THE UNITED ARAB EMIRATES

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The United Arab Emirates extend along the coast of the Arabian Gulf from the base of Qatar to the border with Oman. The climate is exceptionally hot and humid in the summer and mild in the winter. The official language is Arabic, but English is spoken in business circles. Islam is the principal religion. The national flag has horizontal stripes of green, white and black, with a vertical red stripe at the hoist. The capital is Abu Dhabi.

Recent History

Federation of what were then the Trucial States was proposed by the rulers in 1968, when Britain announced its intention of withdrawing its troops from the area by the end of 1971. The proposals originally included Bahrain and Qatar, as well as the seven Trucial States, but they opted for separate independence. Abu Dhabi, Dubai, Sharjah, Umm al-Quwain, Ajman and Fujairah then formed the United Arab Emirates on December 2nd, 1971. Sheikh Zayed bin Sultan, the ruler of Abu Dhabi, became the first President of the U.A.E. Ras al-Khaimah did not join the Union until February 1972.

During the 1973 Middle East war the U.A.E. strongly supported the Arab cause, and has since contributed large sums in aid. In December 1973 the separate Abu Dhabi Government was disbanded and a single Federal Council of Ministers was left in control. Further moves towards centralization have only been achieved after some difficulty. During 1976 Sheikh Zayed announced that he was not prepared to accept another five-year term as President owing to his disappointment with progress towards centralization, but in November 1976 the Supreme Council re-elected him unanimously. Earlier in the month the Supreme Council had granted the President greater control, through federal agencies, on the levying of troops, intelligence services, immigration, public security and border control. A cabinet reshuffle followed in January 1977. Progress towards centralization proved slow in 1978, but in March 1979 a memorandum from the Federal National Council to a meeting of the Supreme Council of Rulers urged total unity. Conflict over the unity issue, however, led to the resignation of the Council of Ministers in April 1979 and the subsequent appointment of Sheikh Rashid bin Said al-Maktum of Dubai as Prime Minister. Sheikh Rashid was in poor health during 1981, but was re-elected Prime Minister by the Supreme Council in November. Sheikh Zayed was re-elected President.

The U.A.E. has shown moderation over oil price increases and has also tended towards moderation in its attitude towards Egypt and the signing of a separate peace treaty with Israel.

Government

The highest federal authority is the Supreme Council of Rulers, comprising the hereditary rulers of the seven emirates. Decisions require the approval of at least five members, including the rulers of both Abu Dhabi and Dubai. From its seven members the Council elects a President and a Vice-President. The President appoints a Prime Minister and a Union (Federal) Council of Ministers, responsible to the Supreme Council, to hold executive authority. The legislature is the Federal National Council, a consultative assembly (comprising 40 members appointed for two years by the emirates) which considers laws proposed by the Council of Ministers. There are no political parties. In local affairs each ruler has absolute power over his subjects.

Defence

The total armed forces numbered 42,500 in July 1981, with an army of 40,000, an air force of 1,500 and a navy of 1,000. The Union Defence Force and the armed forces of Abu Dhabi, Dubai, Ras al-Khaimah and Sharjah were formally merged in May 1976, but practical union has been difficult to achieve. Military service is voluntary. Defence expenditure for 1979 was 2,880 million dirhams.

Economic Affairs

Abu Dhabi's economy is almost entirely dependent on petroleum, and earnings from it have made the state one of the richest in the world in terms of income per head. Dubai is also rich in oil but produces only about 25 per cent of Abu Dhabi's total. In September 1974 the U.A.E. Government acquired 60 per cent participation in Abu Dhabi Petroleum Co. and Abu Dhabi Marine Areas. The huge increase in oil prices and the resultant importance of oil-producing states has been of great benefit to the Emirates. Income from oil rose from U.S. $1,200 million in 1973 to $8,700 million in 1978, $13,000 million in 1979 and $19,200 million in 1980, although production in 1978 and 1979 was about the same, and fell by about 7 per cent in 1980. Dubai remains the principal commercial centre and entrepôt port, and a supertanker dry dock was completed in 1979. An aluminium smelter in Dubai is considering expansion in 1982, and work is in progress on a new deep-water port and industrial city at Jebel Ali, north of Dubai. An industrial complex is under construction at Ruwais, in Abu Dhabi. The rulers of the northern sheikhdoms have all signed oil exploration agreements. Commercial production began in Sharjah in 1974 but has been declining since 1978.

Transport and Communications

Fast tarmac roads have been constructed between Abu Dhabi and Dubai, Sharjah and Ras al-Khaimah, Sharjah and Dhaid linking Dubai with other Northern States and the interior. Dubai is the main port, with harbours at Jebel Ali and Port Rashid, but important harbours are also available at Port Zayed (Abu Dhabi), Port Khalid (Sharjah) and Port Saqr (Ras al-Khaimah). Dubai also has a new international airport and there are smaller international airports at Abu Dhabi and Sharjah.

Social Welfare

Hospital treatment and medical care are provided free throughout the United Arab Emirates, and grants are provided for those needing medical treatment at specialist centres abroad. The U.A.E. had 1,213 physicians in 1979. The Rashid hospital in Dubai opened in 1974, and a system of social welfare benefits is being developed. The Ministry of Health aims to provide 5,500 public hospital beds and to reduce the ratio of beds per head of population to 1 : 200.

Education

Compulsory education is provided for all children in the U.A.E. and in 1980 more than 112,000 students of both sexes were being taught in about 300 schools. A Literacy and Adult Education Programme is also in operation.

Tourism

Plans are in hand to foster tourism in Dubai.

Public Holidays

Friday is the weekly holiday.

1982: May 21st* (Leilat al Meiraj, Ascension of the Prophet), June 23rd (First day of Ramadan), July 23rd-24th* (Id ul Fitr, end of Ramadan), August 6th (Accession of the Ruler of Abu Dhabi), September 29th-October 1st* (Id ul Adha, Feast of the Sacrifice), October 19th (Muslim New Year), December 2nd (National Day), December 25th (Christmas Day), December 26th (Boxing Day), December 28th* (Mouloud, Birth of the Prophet).

1983: January 1st (New Year's Day).

* Muslim religious holidays which may vary slightly from the dates given.

Weights and Measures

The imperial, metric and local systems are all in use.

Currency and Exchange Rates

100 fils = 1 U.A.E. dirham.

Exchange rates (December 1981):

£1 sterling = 7.061 dirhams;

 100 U.A.E. dirhams = £14.16 = $27.24.

Note: Before June 1966 the currency used by the states of Trucial Oman (now the United Arab Emirates) was the Persian Gulf Indian rupee, valued at 1s. 6d. sterling (£1 = 13.33 rupees). When the Indian rupee was devalued in June 1966, Abu Dhabi adopted the Bahrain dinar (of 1,000 fils) while the other states used Saudi Arabian currency prior to the introduction of the Qatar/Dubai riyal (at par with the old rupee) in September 1966. The Bahrain dinar, equal to 10 old rupees, was valued at U.S. $2.10 ($1 = 476.19 fils) until August 1971; at $2.28 ($1 = 438.60 fils) from December 1971 to February 1973; and at $2.533 ($1 = 394.74 fils) from February 1973. The Q/D riyal, also used in Qatar, was valued at 21 U.S. cents ($1 = 4.762 riyals) until August 1971; at 22.8 U.S. cents ($1 = 4.386 riyals) from December 1971 to February 1973; and at 25.33 U.S. cents ($1 = 3.947 riyals) from February 1973. Between November 1967 and June 1972 the Bahrain dinar was valued at 17s. 6d. sterling (87½ new pence) and the Q/D riyal at 1s. 9d. (8.75 new pence), the exchange rates being £1 = 1.143 dinars = 11.43 riyals. In May 1973 the U.A.E. adopted a common currency, the dirham, which was at par with the Q/D riyal (renamed the Qatar riyal) and thus valued at 25.33 U.S. cents. The market exchange rate has been frequently adjusted. It corresponded to the original par value ($1 = 3.947 dirhams) from January to November 1976 and, was $1 = 3.898 dirhams from February 1977 to January 1978. The rate was $1 = 3.978 dirhams from January to September 1978; and $1 = 3.838 dirhams from October 1978 to June 1979. After further frequent adjustments, the rate was $1 = 3.688 dirhams between July and November 1980. A new rate of $1 = 3.671 dirhams was introduced in November 1980. The average rates (dirhams per dollar) were: 3.996 in 1973; 3.959 in 1974; 3.961 in 1975; 3.953 in 1976; 3.903 in 1977; 3.871 in 1978; 3.816 in 1979; 3.707 in 1980.

THE CONSTITUTION

A provisional constitution for the U.A.E. was set up in December 1971. This laid the foundation for the federal structure of the Union of the seven sheikhdoms, previously known as the Trucial States.

The highest federal authority is the Supreme Council which comprises the rulers of the seven Emirates. It elects a president and vice-president from among its members. The president appoints a prime minister and a cabinet. The legislature is the Federal National Council, a consultative assembly comprising 40 members appointed by the emirates for a two-year term.

In July 1975 a committee was appointed to draft a permanent federal constitution, but the National Council decided in 1976 to extend the provisional constitution for five years. The provisional constitution was extended for another five years in December 1981. In November 1976, however, the Supreme Council amended Article 142 of the provisional constitution so that the right to levy armed forces was placed exclusively in the hands of the federal government.

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

The 95th article of the provisional constitution of 1971 provided for the setting up of a Union Supreme Court and Union Primary Tribunals.

The Union has exclusive legislative and executive jurisdiction over all matters that are concerned with the strengthening of the federation such as foreign affairs, defence and Union armed forces, security, finance, communications, traffic control, education, currency, measures, standards and weights, matters relating to nationality and emigration, Union information, etc.

President Sheikh Zayed signed the law establishing the new federal courts on June 9th, 1978. The new law effectively transferred local judicial authorities into the jurisdiction of the federal system.

Primary tribunals in Abu Dhabi, Sharjah, Ajman and Fujairah are now primary federal tribunals and primary tribunals in the other towns in those Emirates have become circuits of the primary federal tribunals.

The primary federal tribunal may sit in any of the capitals of the four Emirates and have jurisdiction on all administrative disputes between the Union and individuals, whether the Union is plaintiff or defendant. Civil disputes between Union and individuals will be heard by primary federal tribunals in the defendant's place of normal residence.

The new law requires that all judges take a constitutional oath before the Minister of Justice and Islamic Affairs and that the courts apply the rules of Sharia (Islamic religious laws) and that no judgment contradicts Sharia. All employees of the old judiciaries will be transferred to the federal authority without loss of salary or seniority.

Chief Sharia Justice: AHMED ABDUL AZIZ AL-MUBARAK.

RELIGION

Most of the inhabitants are Muslims of the Sunni sect. About 20 per cent of the Muslims are Shi'ites.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

PRINCIPAL PETROLEUM CONCESSIONS

In September 1974 the Government of Abu Dhabi acquired a 60 per cent interest in ADPC and ADMA, and early in 1975 an increase of this interest to 100 per cent was under consideration. In the Spring of 1975 Abu Dhabi withdrew from pressing for 100 per cent interest, but in July 1975 it was announced that Dubai had successfully concluded a 100 per cent participation with the companies represented offshore and onshore in Dubai.

Ministry of Petroleum and Mineral Resources: P.O.B. 59, Abu Dhabi; Minister MANI SAID AL-OTEIBA.

ABU DHABI

Abu Dhabi Company for Onshore Oil Operations (ADCO): P.O.B. 270, Abu Dhabi; name changed from Abu Dhabi Petroleum Co. Ltd. (ADPC) in February 1979; shareholders are ADNOC (60 per cent), British Petroleum, Shell and Compagnie Française des Pétroles (9.5 per cent each), Exxon and Mobil (4.75 per cent each) and Partex (2 per cent); production (1980): 267,336,146 barrels; Chair. Sheikh TAHNOUN BIN MOHAMED AL-NAHAYAN; Gen. Man. G. K. TAYLOR.

Abu Dhabi Marine Operating Company (ADMA-OPCO): P.O.B. 303, Abu Dhabi; operates a concession 60 per cent owned by the Abu Dhabi National Oil Co. and 40 per cent by Abu Dhabi Marine Areas Ltd., Britannic House, Moor Lane, London, EC2Y 9BU, England (BP-Japan Oil Development Co. Ltd. 26 $\frac{2}{3}$ per cent; Compagnie Française des Pétroles 13 $\frac{1}{3}$ per cent). The concession lies in the Abu Dhabi offshore area and currently produces oil from Zakum and Umm Shaif fields. ADMA-OPCO was created in 1977 as an operator for the concession which between September 1974 and October 1977 was operated by ADMA Ltd. in its role as an interim operator. The new company is owned by the shareholders of the concession in the same proportion of ownership. ADMA-OPCO also operates the Bunduq field on behalf of the Bunduq Company; production (1980): 184,633,098 barrels (24,432,892.6 metric tons); Gen. Man. Dr. A. J. HORAN.

Abu Dhabi Gas Liquefaction Company (ADGLC): P.O.B. 3500, Abu Dhabi; owned by Abu Dhabi National Oil Co., 51 per cent; the British Petroleum Co., 16 $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent; Compagnie Française des Pétroles, 8 $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent; Mitsui and Co., 22 $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent; Mitsui Liquefied Gas Co., 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. The LNG plant on Das Island, which cost about \$500 million, was commissioned in 1977. The plant uses natural gas produced in association with oil from offshore fields and has a design capacity of approximately 2.2 million tons of LNG per year and 800,000 tons of LPG per year. The liquefied gas is sold to the Tokyo Electric Power Co., Japan; Gen. Man. Dr. D. G. B. HORNE.

Abu Dhabi National Oil Company (ADNOC): P.O.B. 898, Abu Dhabi; f. 1971; state company; deals in all phases of oil industry; inaugurated its own refinery on Umm Al-Nar island, May 1976; Ruwais Refinery was commissioned in 1981; holds 60 per cent participation in operations of ADMA-OPCO and ADCO, and 50 per cent of ZADCO and UDECO; has 100 per cent control of Abu Dhabi National Oil Company for Distribution, Abu Dhabi National Tankers Co. (ADNATCO) and interests in numerous other companies; Chair. Sheikh TAHNOUN BIN MOHAMED AL-NAHAYAN; Gen. Man. MAHMOUD HAMRA KROUHA.

Abu Dhabi Oil Company (Japan) (ADOGO): Abu Dhabi; consortium of Japanese oil companies including Maruzen, Daikyo and Nihon Kogyo; holds offshore concession, extended by 1,582.5 sq. km. in 1979; export of oil from Mubarras Island terminal began in June 1973; production 7,905,927 barrels (1978).

Sedco-Houston Oil Group: Dubai; holds onshore concession of over 1 million acres as well as the offshore concession formerly held by Texas Pacific Oil.

SHARJAH

Concessions are owned by the Buttes Group, the Crescent Group (25.7 per cent owned by Buttes) and Amoco and Forman Explorations.

TRANSPORT

ROADS

Roads are rapidly being developed in the United Arab Emirates, and Abu Dhabi and Dubai are linked by a good road which is dual carriageway for most of its length. This road forms part of a west coast route from Shaam, at the U.A.E. border with the northern enclave of Oman, through Dubai and Abu Dhabi to Tarif. An east coast route links Dibba with Muscat. Other roads include the Abu Dhabi-Al Ain highway and roads linking the northern Emirates. An underwater tunnel links Dubai Town and Deira by dual carriageway and pedestrian subway.

SHIPPING

Dubai has been the main commercial centre in the Gulf for many years. In 1968 work was begun on a new artificial deep-water port to supplement the traditional harbour. Port Rashid had been expanded to 37 berths by 1980. Abu Dhabi has also become an important port since the opening of the first section of its artificial harbour, Port Zayed. Eventually it is planned to create 17 deep-water berths and extensive storage facilities. There are smaller ports in Sharjah and Ras al-Khaimah. Work on a dry-dock scheme for Dubai was completed in 1979. It possesses two docks capable of handling 500,000-ton tankers, seven repair berths and a third dock able to accommodate 1,000,000-ton tankers. By 1981 the port of Jebel Ali, Dubai, contained 66 berths. Five deep-water berths were completed at Port Saqr, Ras al-Khaimah in 1979. Current modernization of Port Khalid in Sharjah will double its berth capacity.

United Arab Shipping Co. (SAG): Kuwait; f. 1976; shareholders are Kuwait, U.A.E., Saudi Arabia, Bahrain, Qatar and Iraq; Chair. EID ABDULLAH YUSUF (Bahrain); Chief Exec. ABDULAZIZ HUSSEIN SALATT.

Trade and Industry, Transport, Tourism and Culture

CIVIL AVIATION

There are international airports at Dubai, Abu Dhabi and Ras al-Khaimah, and a smaller one at Sharjah, which forms part of SHARJAHPORT, which links air, sea and overland transportation services. Abu Dhabi's new Nadia international airport opened for commercial use in January 1982, and a new airport at Al Ain is scheduled for 1983.

Gulf Air Dubai: Dubai National Air Travel Agency, P.O.B. 1515, Dubai; daily service to Abu Dhabi, Bahrain, Beirut, Doha, Karachi, London, Muscat and Salalah; six times weekly to Bombay; five times weekly to Amman; four times weekly to Cairo, Kuwait; three times weekly to Larnaca; and twice weekly to Amsterdam, Paris and Shiraz.

Air Intergulf: Sharjah, P.O.B. 8; charter airline.

November 1971 the unmanned Mariner 9 orbited Mars. In March 1972 Pioneer 10 was launched to travel beyond Jupiter, and in April 1972 Apollo 16 made a successful moon landing. In August the last orbiting astronomical observatory was launched and in May 1973 Skylab was put into orbit. In July 1975 a joint venture with the Soviet Soyuz programme culminated in Soviet and U.S. spacecraft docking in space. The Viking mission landed equipment in 1976 for detecting the existence of life in any form on Mars. In 1977 Voyagers 1 and 2 were launched to travel first to Jupiter and then to Saturn and Uranus. In February 1979 Pioneer Venus transmitted information on atmospheric and surface conditions on Venus and in March photographs of Jupiter were transmitted by Voyager 1. Important photographs of Jupiter and its moons were transmitted by Voyager 2 in July 1979. Data on Saturn was received from a Pioneer spacecraft in September and in November 1980 Voyager 1 transmitted photographs of satellites of Saturn. Photographs of the surface of Saturn were received from Voyager 2 in August 1981. In 1978 a new phase of the space programme began with the testing of the Space Shuttle, a reusable manned vehicle capable of carrying satellite and communications equipment. The initial launching of the vehicle Columbia, following several postponements, was successfully completed in April 1981.

Public Holidays

1982: May 31st (Memorial Day), July 5th (for Independence Day), September 6th (Labor Day), November 11th (Veterans' Day), November 25th (Thanksgiving), December 25th (Christmas Day).

1983: January 1st (New Year's Day), February 21st (for George Washington's Birthday), April 1st (Good Friday).

Weights and Measures

With certain exceptions, the imperial system is in force. One U.S. billion equals one thousand million; one U.S. cwt. equals 100 lb.; long ton equals 2,240 lb.; short ton equals 2,000 lb. Conversion to the metric system is under consideration.

Currency and Exchange Rates

100 cents = 1 United States dollar ($).

Exchange rates (December 1981):

£1 sterling = U.S. $1.92;

U.S. $1 = 51.99 pence.

FINANCE

100 cents=1 United States dollar ($).

Coins: 1, 5, 10, 25 and 50 cents; 1 dollar.

Notes: 1, 2, 5, 10, 20, 50 and 100 dollars.

Exchange rates (December 1981): £1 sterling=U.S. $1.92; U.S. $100=£51.99.

Note: The valuation of the U.S. dollar in terms of gold content was adjusted in January 1934, when the official price of gold was fixed at $35 per troy ounce. When the International Monetary Fund introduced Special Drawing Rights (SDRs) in July 1969 the value of each unit was equivalent to $1. These valuations remained in effect until August 1971, when the U.S. Government announced that it would cease dealing freely in gold to maintain exchange rates for the dollar within previously agreed margins. By thus ending the free convertibility of U.S. currency into gold, the U.S.A. effectively "floated" the dollar against most of the world's major currencies. This "float" continued until December 1971, when agreement was reached on raising the gold price by 8.571 per cent to $38 per troy ounce, representing an effective dollar devaluation of 7.895 per cent. The value of the SDR was accordingly revised to $1.08571 ($1=0.92105 SDR). In February 1973 the U.S. dollar was devalued by a further 10 per cent, the new gold price being $42.2222 per troy ounce. The value of the SDR was adjusted to $1.20635 ($1=0.82895 SDR). Since July 1974 the direct link between the SDR and the U.S. dollar has been broken and the SDR's value is based on a weighted "basket" of currencies. The average value of the SDR was $1.20264 ($1=0.83150 SDR) in 1974; $1.21415 ($1=0.82362 SDR) in 1975; $1.15452 ($1=0.86616 SDR) in 1976; $1.16752 ($1=0.85652 SDR), in 1977; $1.25200 ($1=0.79872 SDR) in 1978; $1.29200 ($1=0.77399 SDR) in 1979; $1.30153 ($1=0.76833 SDR) in 1980. In terms of sterling, the exchange rate was £1=$2.80 from September 1949 to November 1967; £1=$2.40 from November 1976 to August 1971; and £1=$2.6057 ($1=38.377p) from December 1971 to June 1972.

* Preliminary.

¹ Beginning in July 1974, U.S. holdings of special drawing rights and the reserve position include changes in the SDR based on changes in a weighted average of exchange rates for selected national currencies.

² Also includes paid-in capital subscription to international financial institutions and outstanding amounts of miscellaneous claims that have been settled through international agreements to be payable to the U.S. Government over periods in excess of one year. Excludes World War I debts that are not being serviced.

³ Includes indebtedness that the borrower may contractually, or at its option, repay with its currency, with a third country's currency, or by delivery of materials or transfer of services.

⁴ Due to the introduction of new forms of reporting, the maturity breakdown is not available.

⁶ The distinction between long- and short-term liabilities was discontinued in 1978.

THE CONSTITUTION

(Adopted March 4th, 1789)

Preamble

We, the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect Union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defence, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America.

Article I

Section 1

All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States; which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives.

Section 2

1. The House of Representatives shall be composed of members chosen every second year by the people of the several States and the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature.

2. No person shall be a Representative who shall not have attained to the age of twenty-five years and been seven years a citizen of the United States and who shall not, when elected, be an inhabitant of that State in which he shall be chosen.

3. Representatives and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within this Union according to their respective numbers, which shall be determined by adding to the whole number of free persons, including those bound to service for a term of years, and excluding Indians not taxed, three-fifths of all other persons. The actual enumeration shall be made within three years after the first meeting of the Congress of the United States, and within every subsequent term of ten years, in such manner as they shall by law direct. The number of Representatives shall not exceed one for every thirty thousand, but each State shall have at least one Representative; and until such enumeration shall be made, the State of New Hampshire shall be entitled to choose 3; Massachusetts 8; Rhode Island and Providence Plantations 1; Connecticut 5; New York 6; New Jersey 4; Pennsylvania 8; Delaware 1; Maryland 6; Virginia 10; North Carolina 5; South Carolina 5; and Georgia 3.*

4. When vacancies happen in the representation from any State, the Executive Authority thereof shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies.

* See Article XIV, Amendments.

5. The House of Representatives shall choose their Speaker and other officers and shall have the sole power of impeachment.

Section 3

1. The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the Legislature thereof, for six years; and each Senator shall have one vote.

2. Immediately after they shall be assembled in consequence of the first election, they shall be divided as equally as may be into three classes. The seats of the Senators of the first class shall be vacated at the expiration of the second year, of the second class at the expiration of the fourth year, and of the third class at the expiration of the sixth year, so that one-third may be chosen every second year, and if vacancies happen by resignation or otherwise, during the recess of the Legislature or of any State, the Executive thereof may make temporary appointment until the next meeting of the Legislature, which shall then fill such vacancies.

3. No person shall be a Senator who shall not have attained to the age of thirty years, and been nine years a citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an inhabitant of that State for which he shall be chosen.

4. The Vice-President of the United States shall be President of the Senate, but shall have no vote unless they be equally divided.

5. The Senate shall choose their other officers, and also a President pro tempore, in the absence of the Vice-President, or when he shall exercise the office of the President of the United States.

6. The Senate shall have the sole power to try all impeachments. When sitting for that purpose, they shall be on oath or affirmation. When the President of the United States is tried, the Chief Justice shall preside; and no person shall be convicted without the concurrence of two-thirds of the members present.

7. Judgment of case of impeachment shall not extend further than to removal from office, and disqualification to hold and enjoy any office of honour, trust, or profit under the United States; but the party convicted shall nevertheless be liable and subject to indictment, trial, judgment, and punishment, according to law.

Section 4

1. The times, places and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to places of choosing Senators.

2. The Congress shall assemble at least once in every year, and such meeting shall be on the first Monday in December, unless they shall by law appoint a different day.

Section 5

1. Each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members, and a majority of each shall constitute a quorum to do business; but a smaller number may adjourn from day to day, and may be authorized to compel the attendance of absent members in such manner and under such penalties as each House may provide.

2. Each House may determine the rules of its proceedings, punish its members for disorderly behaviour, and with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a member.

3. Each House shall keep a journal of its proceedings, and from time to time publish the same, excepting such parts as may in their judgment require secrecy; and the yeas and nays of the members of either House on any question shall, at the desire of one-fifth of those present, be entered on the journal.

4. Neither House, during the session of Congress shall, without the consent of the other, adjourn for more than three days, nor to any other place than that in which the two Houses shall be sitting.

Section 6

1. The Senators and Representatives shall receive a compensation for their services to be ascertained by law, and paid out of the Treasury of the United States. They shall in all cases, except treason, felony, and breach of the peace, be privileged from arrest during their attendance at the session of their respective Houses, and in going to and returning from the same; and for any speech or debate in either House they shall not be questioned in any other place.

2. No Senator or Representative shall, during the time for which he was elected, be appointed to any civil office under the authority of the United States which shall have been created, or the emoluments whereof shall have been increased during such time; and no person holding any office under the United States shall be a member of either House during his continuance in office.

Section 7

1. All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives, but the Senate may propose or concur with amendments, as on other bills.

2. Every bill which shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate shall, before it becomes a law, be presented to the President of the United States; if he approve, he shall sign it, but if not he shall return it, with his objections to that House in which it shall have originated, who shall enter the objections at large on their journal and proceed to reconsider it. If after such reconsideration two-thirds of that House shall agree to pass the bill, it shall be sent, together with the objections, to the other House, by which it shall likewise be reconsidered; and if approved by two-thirds of that House it shall become a law. But in all such cases the votes of both Houses shall be determined by yeas and nays, and the names of the persons voting for and against the bill shall be entered on the journal of each House respectively. If any bill shall not be returned by the President within ten days (Sundays excepted) after it shall have been presented to him 'the same shall be a law in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the Congress by their adjournment prevent its return; in which case it shall not be a law.

3. Every order, resolution, or vote to which the concurrence of the Senate and House of Representatives may be necessary (except on a question of adjournment) shall be presented to the President of the United States, and before the same shall take effect shall be approved by him, or being disapproved by him shall be repassed by two-thirds of the Senate and the House of Representatives, according to the rules and limitations prescribed in the case of a bill.

Section 8

1. The Congress shall have power:

To lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defence and general welfare of the United States; but all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States.

2. To borrow money on the credit of the United States

3. To regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States and with the Indian tribes.

4. To establish a uniform rule of naturalization and uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcies throughout the United States.

5. To coin money, regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin, and fix the standard of weights and measures.

6. To provide for the punishment of counterfeiting the securities and current coin of the United States.

7. To establish post-offices and post-roads.

8. To promote the progress of science and useful arts by securing for limited times to authors and inventors the exclusive rights to their respective writings and discoveries.

9. To constitute tribunals inferior to the Supreme Court.

10. To define and punish piracies and felonies committed on the high seas, and offences against the law of nations.

11. To declare war, grant letters of marque and reprisal, and make rules concerning captures on land and water.

12. To raise and support armies, but no appropriation of money to that use shall be for a longer term than two years.

13. To provide and maintain a navy.

14. To make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces.

15. To provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions.

16. To provide for organizing, arming and disciplining the militia, and for governing such part of them as may be employed in the service of the United States, reserving to the States respectively the appointment of the officers, and the authority of training the militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress.

17. To exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever over such district (not exceeding ten miles square) as may, by cession of particular States and the acceptance of Congress, become the seat of Government of the United States and to exercise like authority over all places purchased by the consent of the Legislature of the State in which the same shall be, for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dry-docks, and other needful buildings.

18. To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying 'nto execution the foregoing powers and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof.

Section 9

1. The migration or importation of such persons as any of the States now existing shall think proper to admit shall not be prohibited by the Congress prior to the year one thousand eight hundred and eight, but a tax or duty may be imposed on such importations, not exceeding ten dollars for each person.

2. The privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended, unless when in cases of rebellion or invasion the public safety may require it.

3. No bill or attainder or ex post facto law shall be passed.

4. No capitation or other direct tax shall be laid, unless in proportion to the census or enumeration hereinbefore directed to be taken.

5. No tax or duty shall be laid on articles exported from any State.

6. No preference shall be given by any regulation of commerce or revenue to the ports of one State over those of another, nor shall vessels bound to or from one State be obliged to enter, clear, or pay duties to another.

7. No money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law; and a regular statement and account of the receipts and expenditures of all public money shall be published from time to time.

8. No title of nobility shall be granted by the United States. And no person holding any office of profit or trust under them shall, without the consent of the Congress, accept of any present, emolument, office, or title of any kind whatever from any king, prince, or foreign state.

Section 10

1. No State shall enter into any treaty, alliance or confederation, grant letters of marque and reprisal, coin money, emit bills of credit, make anything but gold and silver coin a tender in payment of debts, pass any bill of attainder, ex post facto law, or law impairing the obligation of contracts, or grant any title of nobility.

2. No State shall, without the consent of the Congress, lay any impost or duties on imports or exports, except what may be absolutely necessary for executing its inspection laws, and the net produce of all duties and imposts, laid by any State on imports or exports, shall be for the use of the Treasury of the United States; and all such laws shall be subject to the revision and control of the Congress.

3. No State shall, without the consent of Congress, lay any duty of tonnage, keep troops or ships of war in time of peace, enter into agreement or compact with another State, or with a foreign power, or engage in war, unless actually invaded, or in such imminent danger as will not admit of delay.

Article 11

Section 1.

1. The Executive power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America. He shall hold his office during the term of four years, and, together with the Vice-President chosen for the same term, be elected as follows:

2. Each State shall appoint, in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress; but no Senator or Representative or person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States shall be appointed an elector.

3. The electors shall meet in their respective States and vote by ballot for two persons, of whom one at least shall not be an inhabitant of the same State with themselves.

And they shall make a list of all the persons voted for, and of the number of votes for each, which list they shall sign and certify and transmit, sealed, to the seat of the Government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate. The President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates, and the votes shall then be counted. The person having the greatest number of votes shall be the President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of electors appointed, and if there be more than one who have such a majority, and have an equal number of votes, then the House of Representatives shall immediately choose by ballot one of them for President; and if no person have a majority, then from the five highest on the list the said House shall in like manner choose the President. But in choosing the President, the vote shall be taken by States, the representation from each State having one vote. A quorum, for this purpose, shall consist of a member or members from two-thirds of the States, and a majority of all the States shall be necessary to a choice. In every case, after the choice of the President, the person having the greatest number of votes of the electors shall be the Vice-President. But if there should remain two or more who have equal votes, the Senate shall choose from them by ballot the Vice-President.*

4. The Congress may determine the time of choosing the electors and the day on which they shall give their votes, which day shall be the same throughout the United States.

5. No person except a natural born citizen, or a citizen of the United States, at the time of the adoption of the Constitution, shall be eligible to the office of President; neither shall any person be eligible to that office who shall not have attained to the age of thirty-five years and been fourteen years a resident within the United States.

6. In case of the removal of the President from office, or of his death, resignation, or inability to discharge the powers and duties of the said office, the same shall devolve on the Vice-President, and the Congress may by law provide for the case of removal, death, resignation, or inability, both of the President and Vice-President, declaring what officer shall then act as President, and such officer shall act accordingly until the disability be removed or a President shall be elected.†

7. The President shall, at stated times, receive for his services a compensation which shall neither be increased nor diminished during the period for which he shall have been elected, and he shall not receive within that period any other emolument from the United States, or any of them.

8. Before he enter on the execution of his office he shall take the following oath or affirmation:

"I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will faithfully execute the office of President of the United States, and will, to the best of my ability, preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States."

Section 2

1. The President shall be Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, and of the militia of the several States when called into the actual service of the United States; he may require the opinion, in writing, of the principal officer in each of the executive departments upon any subject relating to the duties of their respective offices, and he shall have power to grant reprieves and pardons for offences against the United States except in cases of impeachment.

* This clause is superseded by Article XII, Amendments.

† This clause is amended by Articles XX and XXV, Amendments.

2. He shall have power by and with the advice and consent of the Senate to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur; and he shall nominate and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate shall appoint ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law; but the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers as they think proper in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of departments.

3. The President shall have power to fill up all vacancies that may happen during the recess of the Senate by granting commissions, which shall expire at the end of their next session.

Section 3

He shall from time to time give to the Congress information of the state of the Union, and recommend to their consideration such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient; he may, on extraordinary occasions, convene both Houses, or either of them, and in case of disagreement between them with respect to the time of adjournment, he may adjourn them to such time as he shall think proper; he shall receive ambassadors and other public ministers; he shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed, and shall commission all the officers of the United States.

Section 4

The President, Vice-President, and all civil officers of the United States shall be removed from office on impeachment for conviction of treason, bribery or other high crimes and misdemeanours.

Article III

Section 1

The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court, and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The judges, both of the Supreme and inferior courts, shall hold their offices during good behaviour, and shall at stated times receive for their services a compensation which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office.

Section 2

1. The judicial power shall extend to all cases in law and equity arising under this Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made, or which shall be made, under their authority; to all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls; to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction; to controversies to which the United States shall be a party; to controversies between two or more States, between a State and citizens of another State, between citizens of different States, between citizens of the same State claiming lands under grants of different States, and between a State, or the citizens thereof, and foreign States, citizens, or subjects.

2. In all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers, and consuls, and those in which a State shall be party, the Supreme Court shall have original jurisdiction. In all the other cases before mentioned the Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction both as to law and fact, with such exceptions and under such regulations as the Congress shall make.

3. The trial of all crimes, except in cases of impeachment, shall be by jury, and such trials shall be held in the State where the said crimes shall have been committed; but when not committed within any State the trial shall be at such place or places as the Congress may by law have directed.

Section 3

1. Treason against the United States shall consist only in levying war against them, or in adhering to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort. No person shall be convicted of treason unless on the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act, or on confession in open court.

2. The Congress shall have power to declare the punishment of treason, but no attainder of treason shall work corruption of blood or forfeiture except during the life of the person attained.

Article IV

Section 1

Full faith and credit shall be given in each State to the public acts, records, and judicial proceedings of every other State. And the Congress may by general laws prescribe the manner in which such acts, records, and proceedings shall be proved, and the effect thereof.

Section 2

1. The citizens of each State shall be entitled to all privileges and immunities of citizens in the several States.

2. A person charged in any State with treason, felony, or other crime, who shall flee from justice, and be found in another State, shall, on demand of the Executive authority of the State from which he fled, be delivered up, to be removed to the State having jurisdiction of the crime.

3. No person held to service or labour in one State, under the laws thereof, escaping into another shall in consequence of any law or regulation therein, be discharged from such service or labour, but shall be delivered up on claim of the party to whom such service or labour may be due.

Section 3

1. New States may be admitted by the Congress into this Union; but no new State shall be formed or erected within the jurisdiction of any other State, nor any State be formed by the junction of two or more States, or parts of States, without the consent of the Legislatures of the States concerned, as well as of the Congress.

2. The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States; and nothing in this Constitution shall be so construed as to prejudice any claims of the United States, or of any particular State.

Section 4

The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a Republican form of government, and shall protect each of them against invasion, and on application of the Legislature, or of the Executive (when the Legislature cannot be convened) against domestic violence.

Article V

The Congress, whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to this Constitution, or, on the application of the Legislature of two-thirds of the several States, shall call a convention for proposing amendments, which in either case, shall be valid to all intents and purposes, as part of this Constitution, when ratified by the Legislature of three-fourths of the several States, or by conventions in three-fourths thereof, as the one or the other mode of ratification may be proposed by the Congress, provided that no amendment which may be made prior to the year one thousand eight hundred and eight shall in any manner affect the first and fourth clauses in the Ninth Section of the First Article; and that no State, without its consent, shall be deprived of its equal suffrage in the Senate.

Article VI

1. All debts contracted and engagements entered into before the adoption of this Constitution shall be as valid against the United States under this Constitution as under the Confederation.

2. This Constitution and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof and all treaties made, or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land, and the judges in every State shall be bound thereby, anything in the Constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding.

3. The Senators and Representatives before mentioned, and the members of the several State Legislatures, and all executives and judicial officers, both of the United States and of the several States, shall be bound by oath or affirmation to support this Constitution; but no religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under the United States.

Article VII

The ratification of the Conventions of nine States shall be sufficient for the establishment of this Constitution between the States so ratifying the same.

AMENDMENTS TO THE CONSTITUTIONTen Original Amendments, in force December 15th, 1791*Article I

Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the Press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

Article II

A well-regulated militia being necessary to the security of a free State, the right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed.

Article III

No soldier shall, in time of peace, be quartered in any house without the consent of the owner, nor in time of war but in a manner to be prescribed by law.

Article IV

The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized.

Article V

No person shall be held to answer for a capital or other infamous crime unless on a presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the militia, when in actual service, in time of war or public danger; nor shall any person be subject for the same offense to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb; nor shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation.

Article VI

In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed, which districts shall have been previously ascertained by law, and to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation; to be confronted with the witnesses against him; to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favour, and to have the assistance of counsel for his defense.

Article VII

In suits at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed twenty dollars, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved, and no fact tried by a jury shall be otherwise re-examined in any court of the United States than according to the rules of the common law.

Article VIII

Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted.

Article IX

The enumeration in the Constitution of certain rights shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people.

Article X

The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.

Article XI, became part of the Constitution February 1795

The judicial power of the United States shall not be construed to extend to any suit in law or equity, commenced or prosecuted against one of the United States, by citizens of another State, or by citizens or subjects of any foreign State.

Article XII, ratified June 1804

The Electors shall meet in their respective States, and vote by ballot for President and Vice-President, one of whom at least shall not be an inhabitant of the same State with themselves; they shall name in their ballots the person voted for as President, and in distinct ballots the person voted for as Vice-President; and they shall make distinct list of all persons voted for as President, and of all persons voted for as Vice-President, and of the number of votes for each, which list they shall sign and certify, and transmit, sealed, to the seat of the Government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate; the President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates and the votes shall then be counted; the person having the greatest number of votes for President shall be the President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of Electors appointed; and if no person have such majority, then from the persons having the highest number, not exceeding three, on the list of those voted for as President, the House of Representatives shall choose immediately, by ballot, the President. But in choosing the President, the votes shall be taken by States, the representation from each State having one vote; a quorum for this purpose shall consist of a member or members from two-thirds of the States, and a majority of all the States shall be necessary to a choice. And if the House of Representatives shall not choose a President, whenever the right of choice shall devolve upon them, before the fourth day of March next following, then the Vice-President shall act as President, as in the case of the death or other constitutional disability of the President. The person having the greatest number of votes as Vice-President shall be the Vice-President if such number be a majority of the whole number of Electors appointed, and if no person have a majority, then, from the two highest numbers on the list the Senate shall choose the Vice-President; a quorum for the purpose shall consist of two-thirds of the whole number of Senators, and a majority of the whole number shall be necessary to a choice. But no person constitutionally ineligible to the office of President shall be eligible to that of Vice-President of the United States.

Article XIII, ratified December 1865

1. Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States, or any place subject to their jurisdiction.

2. Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Article XIV, ratified July 1868

1. All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States, nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

2. Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State excluding Indians not taxed. But when the right to vote at any election for the choice of Electors for President and Vice-President of the United States, Representatives in Congress, the executive and judicial officers of a State, or the members of the Legislature thereof, is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such State, being twenty-one years of age, and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion, or other crime, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens twenty-one years of age in such State.

3. No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or Elector of President and Vice-President or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any State, who, having previously taken an oath as member of Congress or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State Legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid and comfort to the enemies thereof. But Congress may, by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability.

4. The validity of the public debt of the United States, authorized by law, including debts incurred for payment of pensions and bounties for services in suppressing insurrection and rebellion, shall not be questioned. But neither the United States nor any State shall assume or pay any debt or obligation incurred in aid of insurrection or rebellion against the United States, or any claim for the loss or emancipation of any slave; but all such debts, obligations, and claims shall be held illegal and void.

5. The Congress shall have power to enforce by appropriate legislation the provisions of this article.

Article XV, ratified March 1870

1. The right of the citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, colour, or previous condition of servitude.

2. The Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of this article by appropriate legislation.

Article XVI, ratified February 1913

The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever sources derived, without apportionment among the several States, and without regard to any census or enumeration.

Article XVII, ratified May 1913

1. The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, elected by the people thereof, for six years; and each Senator shall have one vote. The electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature.

2. When vacancies happen in the representation of any State in the Senate, the executive authority of such State shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies: Provided that the Legislature of any State may empower the Executive thereof to make temporary appointment until the people fill the vacancies by election as the Legislature may direct.

3. This amendment shall not be so construed as to affect the election or term of any Senator chosen before it becomes valid as part of the Constitution.

Article XVIII, ratified January 1919*

1. After one year from the ratification of this article the manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into, or the exportation thereof from the United States, and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof for beverage purposes is hereby prohibited.

2. The Congress and the several States shall have concurrent power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

3. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the Legislatures of the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within seven years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress.

Article XIX, ratified August 1920

1. The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of sex.

2. Congress shall have power, by appropriate legislation to enforce the provisions of this article.

Article XX, ratified January 1933

Section 1

The terms of the President and Vice-President shall end at noon on the 20th day of January, and the terms of Senators and Representatives at noon on the 3rd day of January, of the years in which such terms would have ended if this article had not been ratified; and the terms of their successors shall then begin.

Section 2

The Congress shall assemble at least once in every year, and such meeting shall begin at noon on the third day of January, unless they shall by law appoint a different day.

* Repealed by Article XXI.

Section 3

If, at the time fixed for the beginning of the term of the President, the President elect shall have died, the Vice-President elect shall become President. If a President shall not have been chosen before the time fixed for the beginning of his term, or if the President elect shall have failed to qualify, then the Vice-President elect shall act as President until a President shall have qualified; and the Congress may by law provide for the case wherein neither a President elect nor a Vice-President elect shall have qualified, declaring who shall then act as President, or the manner in which one who is to act shall be selected, and such person shall act accordingly until a President or Vice-President shall have qualified.

Section 4

The Congress may by law provide for the case of the death of any of the persons from whom the House of Representatives may choose a President whenever the right of choice shall have devolved upon them, and for the case of the death of any of the persons from whom the Senate may choose a Vice-President whenever the right of choice shall have devolved upon them.

Section 5

Sections 1 and 2 shall take effect on the 15th day of October following the ratification of this article.

Section 6

This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislature of three-fourths of the several States within seven years from the date of its submission.

Article XXI, ratified December 1933Section 1

The eighteenth article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States is hereby repealed.

Section 2

The transportation or importation into any State, Territory or Possession of the United States for delivery or use therein of intoxicating liquors, in violation of the laws thereof, is hereby prohibited.

Section 3

This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by conventions in the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within seven years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress.

Article XXII, ratified February 1951

No person shall be elected to the office of President more than twice, and no person who has held the office of President, or acted as President, for more than two years of a term to which some other person was elected President shall be elected to the office of President more than once. But this article shall not apply to any person holding the office of President when this Article was proposed by Congress, and shall not prevent any person who may be holding the office of President, or acting as President, during the term within which this Article becomes operative from holding the office of President or acting as President during the remainder of such term.

Article XXIII, ratified March 1961Section 1

The District constituting the seat of Government of the United States shall appoint in such manner as the Congress may direct:

A number of electors of President and Vice-President equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives in Congress to which the District would be entitled if it were a State, but in no event more than the least populous State; they shall be in addition to those appointed by the States, but they shall be considered, for the purposes of the election of President and Vice-President, to be electors appointed by a State; and they shall meet in the District and perform such duties as provided by the twelfth article of amendment.

Section 2

The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Article XXIV, ratified January 1964Section 1

The right of citizens of the United States to vote in any primary or other election for President or Vice-President, for electors for President or Vice-President, or for Senator or Representative in Congress, shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or any State by reason of failure to pay any poll tax or other tax.

Section 2

The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Article XXV, ratified February 1967Section 1

In the case of the removal of the President from office or of his death or resignation, the Vice-President shall become President.

Section 2

Whenever there is a vacancy in the office of the Vice-President, the President shall nominate a Vice-President who shall take office upon confirmation by a majority vote of both Houses of Congress.

Section 3

Whenever the President transmits to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives his written declaration that he is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office, and until he transmits to them a written declaration to the contrary, such powers and duties shall be discharged by the Vice-President as Acting President.

Section 4

Whenever the Vice-President and a majority of either the principal officers of the executive departments or of such other body as Congress may by law provide, transmit to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives their written declaration that the President is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office, the Vice-President shall immediately assume the powers and duties of the office as Acting President.

Thereafter, when the President transmits to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives his written declaration that no inability exists, he shall resume the powers and duties of his office unless the Vice-President and a majority of either the principal officers of the executive department or of such other body as Congress may by law provide, transmit within four days to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives their written declaration that the President is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office. Thereupon Congress shall decide the issue, assembling within forty-eight hours for that purpose if not in session. If the Congress, within twenty-one days after receipt of the latter written declaration, or, if Congress is not in session, within twenty-one days after Congress is required to assemble, determines by two-thirds vote of both Houses that the President is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office, the Vice-President shall continue to discharge the same as Acting President; otherwise, the President shall resume the powers and duties of his office.

Article XXVI, ratified July 1971

Section 1

The right of citizens of the United States, who are 18 years of age or older, to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of age.

Section 2

The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

NOTE: By Article IV, Section 3 of the Constitution, implemented by vote of Congress and referendum in the territory concerned, Alaska was admitted into the United States on January 3rd, 1959, and Hawaii on August 21st, 1959.

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

Each State has a judicial system similar to the Federal system listed below, with a Supreme Court and subsidiary courts, to deal with cases arising under State Law. State courts deal with most crimes, divorces and civil state law. Each State has its own prison system, bar association of lawyers and its own body of laws.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

(Washington, D.C. 20543)

The Supreme Court is the only Federal Court set up by the Constitution. It is the highest court in the nation. Since 1869 the Supreme Court has consisted of the Chief Justice and eight Associate Justices. Appointments are made by the President and last until a justice either retires or dies.

Chief Justice: WARREN E. BURGER (appointed 1969).

U.S. COURTS OF APPEAL

The country is divided into 12 judicial circuits, including one in the District of Columbia, in each of which there is one Court of Appeals. There are also 94 District Courts.

By statute most Federal suits must first be tried in the District Courts. Federal Courts hear cases involving federal law, cases involving participants from more than one state, crimes committed in more than one state and civil or corporate cases that cross state lines.

COMPTROLLER OF THE CURRENCY
(Washington, D.C. 20219)

Comptroller: JOHN G. HEIMANN.

The Comptroller of the Currency has supervisory control over all Federal chartered banks (the national banks), comprising less than one-third of the banks but holding almost 60 per cent of the assets in the U.S. banking system.

INTERNATIONAL BANK

First Washington Securities Corporation: 1735 Eye St., N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006; f. 1969; international investment banking, particularly in acquisitions, mergers and joint ventures; Chair. MARTIN M. ROSEN.

EXPORT-IMPORT BANK

Export-Import Bank of the United States: 811 Vermont Ave., Washington, D.C. 20571; f. 1934, and made a permanent independent agency of the United States in 1945; auth. cap. stock $1,000,000,000; Board of Directors appointed by the President, finances and facilitates U.S. trade with other countries, guarantees payment to American foreign traders and banks, extends credit to foreign government and private concerns; Pres. and Chair. WILLIAM H. DRAPER, III; Vice-Chair. H. K. ALLEN.

COMMERCIAL BANKING SYSTEM

As might be expected the United States banking system is the largest and in many respects the most comprehensive and sophisticated in the world, and it includes the two largest banks in terms of deposits and total assets. Banking has, however, been largely subject to state rather than federal jurisdiction, and this has created a structure very different from that in other advanced industrial countries. In general no bank may open branches or acquire subsidiaries in states other than that in which it is based. Some states also restrict banks to a single branch, or to operating only in certain counties of the state. The strict federal anti-trust laws also limit mergers of banks within a state. The effect of these measures has been to preserve the independence of a very large number of banks: over 14,000 in 1981. Nevertheless, the dominant banks are the main banks in the big industrial states; of the ten largest, six are based in New York and two each in California and Illinois.

BANK HOLDING COMPANIES

Since 1956 bank holding companies, corporations that control one or more banks in the U.S.A., have become significant elements in the banking system. At the beginning of 1979 there were 2,225 bank holding companies in the U.S., with total deposits of $910,382 million.

BANKING AND THE INDIVIDUAL

The possession of bank accounts and the use of banking facilities are perhaps more widespread among all classes and regions than in any other country. This has had important effects on monetary theory and policy, as bank credit has become much more important than currency supply in the regulation of the economy. Use of current accounts and credit cards are so common that many authorities claim the U.S. can be regarded as effectively a cashless society.

EXPANSION OVERSEAS

Since 1960 the leading banks have rapidly built up substantial banking interests overseas. There were then only about 15 branches of U.S. banks in Europe and a negligible number elsewhere; by late 1980 some 787 branches had opened overseas (57 in the United Kingdom), owned by 139 banks. Over 400 of these are owned by the largest three banks; these three, and several others, also own or have taken large minority interests in a number of foreign banks. Overseas branches as a whole were estimated to account for 21.9 per cent of deposits at all U.S. insured commercial banks. The main factors behind the expansion overseas are the geographical limitations imposed by law at home; the rapid expansion of U.S. business interests abroad and their preference for dealing with an American bank; the faster economic growth of certain foreign countries; and finally the profitability of the "Euro-dollar" capital market.

COMMERCIAL BANKS

The following list is based on a minimum of $1,000 million deposits. In states where no such bank exists the bank with the largest deposits is listed.

PRINCIPAL PORTS

The two largest ports in the U.S.A. in terms of traffic handled are New Orleans, Louisiana, handling over 167 million short tons in 1979, and New York (164 million short tons); many other large ports serve each coast, 41 of them handling between 9 and 90 million tons of traffic annually. The deepening of channels and locks on the St. Lawrence-Great Lakes Waterway, allowing the passage of large ocean-going vessels, has increased the importance of the Great Lakes ports, of which 10 handled over 10 million short tons in 1979. The largest of the inland ports, Chicago, handled over 38 million short tons in 1979.

THE CONSTITUTION

American Samoa is administered by the United States Department of the Interior. According to the 1966 constitution executive power is vested in the Governor. The Governor's authority extends to all operations within the territory of American Samoa. He has veto power with respect to bills passed by the Fono (Legislature). The Fono consists of a Senate and a House of Representatives, with a President and a Speaker presiding over their respective divisions. The Senate is composed of 18 members elected according to Samoan custom from local chiefs, or matai. The House of Representatives consists of 20 members elected by popular vote. The Fono meets twice a year, in February and July, for not more than 45 days and at such special sessions as the Governor may call. The Governor has the authority to appoint heads of departments with the approval of the Senate. Local government is carried out by indigenous officials. In August 1976 a referendum on the popular election of a Governor and Lt.-Governor resulted in an affirmative vote. On September 13th, 1977, the Secretary of the Interior issued an order which provided for gubernatorial elections every four years. The first of these elections was held on November 8th, 1977.

NORTHERN MARIANA ISLANDS

The Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands comprises 16 islands (all the Marianas except Guam) in the Western Pacific, 5,300 km. west of Honolulu (Hawaii). Six islands, including the three largest, Saipan, Tinian and Rota, are inhabited; the chief settlement and administrative centre are on Saipan.

Formerly part of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, the islands voted for separate status as a U.S. commonwealth territory in June 1975, and in March 1976 President Ford signed the Northern Marianas Commonwealth Covenant. In October 1977 President Carter approved the constitution of the Northern Mariana Islands, which provides that from January 1978 the former Marianas District is internally self-governing. In December 1977 elections were held for a bicameral legislature, a governor and a lieutenant-governor. The residents of the islands are not expected to obtain full citizenship of the U.S.A. until negotiations to decide the future status of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands are completed and the trusteeship is ended.

Military land on Tinian is to be leased to the U.S. Government for U.S. $19 million, and the islands will also receive $14 million in direct aid for each of the seven years after 1978. Additional income is expected to come from U.S. federal welfare and development programmes.

Serious damage was caused by Typhoon Dinah in November 1980, and in May 1981 the sudden eruption of a volcano forced the inhabitants of the island of Pagan to flee.

TRANSPORT

ROADS

Macadam and concrete roads are found in the more important islands. Other islands have stone and coral-surfaced roads and tracks. By 1976 there were about 200 kilometres of paved road and 550 kilometres of unpaved.

SHIPPING

There are seven commercial docks; one on each of the major inhabited islands.

Most shipping in the Territory is government-organized. (See the chapter on the Northern Mariana Islands.) However, Nauru Pacific Line operates a regular container service from Melbourne (Australia) to Truk, Ponape, Kosrae and Majuro and other services from San Francisco (U.S.A.) and Honolulu (Hawaii) to Majuro, Ponape and Truk. The Kyowa Line operates a monthly service from Hong Kong, Taiwan, the Republic of Korea and Japan to Truk and Ponape. Other commercial carriers which serve the Marshall Islands include Philippine Micronesia and Orient Navigation (PM & O), Tiger Line, Nippon Yusen Kaisha, and Matson Line.

CIVIL AVIATION

Airline of the Marshall Islands, based in Majuro, provides an internal service for the Marshall Islands. The Trust Territory is also served by Air Micronesia (Northern Mariana Islands. JAL (Japan) and Air Nauru operate occasional services to the territory.

UNITED STATES VIRGIN ISLANDS

The U.S. Virgin Islands consist of three main islands (St. Thomas, St. John and St. Croix) and about 50 smaller islands (mostly uninhabited), situated at the eastern end of the Greater Antilles about 64 km. (40 miles) east of Puerto Rico in the Caribbean.

The U.S. bought the Virgin Islands from Denmark in 1917, and they were administered through the Navy Department. In 1931 their administration was moved to the Department of the Interior and civilian as opposed to Naval Governors were appointed, usually of the same political allegiance as the President of the United States. The Democratic Party has been the majority party for many years, and Republican governors tended to be in conflict with the local Legislature, though over political rather than racial issues. In November 1970 the first gubernatorial election took place and was hotly contested by the three parties. The Republican incumbent, Melvin Evans, retained office. In 1974 Cyril E. King, leader of the Independent Citizens Movement, was elected Governor.

After King's death in 1978, Juan Luis, the former Lieutenant-Governor, was elected Governor and inaugurated in January 1979.

Since 1945 the Virgin Islands have become a popular tourist centre as well as a place of settlement for a rapidly increasing number of Americans. The tourist trade has brought a measure of prosperity, but at the same time, in conjunction with the increase in population, it has created social problems and a drastic labour shortage, as basic amenities have been unable to keep pace with the demand. Nearly a third of the population are aliens due to the importation of labour, and this has resulted in a serious problem for the U.S. Federal Immigration Service. In recent years efforts have been made to improve and diversify the islands' economy by attracting labour-intensive, non-polluting industries to the territory and it is hoped to expand employment capacity in the manufacturing sector to 10-15 per cent of the workforce by the year 2000.

STATISTICAL SURVEY

Area: 344.5 sq. km. (133 sq. miles).

Population: 95,214 (census of April 1st, 1980).

Births and Deaths (1978): 2,579 live births (24.8 per 1,000); 504 deaths (4.8 per 1,000).

Employment (1979): Government 13,240, Retail trade 6,180, Construction 2,660, Hotels 2,760, Manufacturing 3,150, Personal, business and domestic services 3,110, Transportation and public utilities 1,950, Finance, insurance and real estate 1,540, Wholesale trade 610, Agriculture and self-employed 3,560. Total labour force 41,210.

Agriculture: Sorghum has recently been introduced with some success on St. Croix. Small quantities of fruit and vegetables are produced on St. Croix and St. Thomas but most of the land is unsuitable for cultivation on a significant scale.

Livestock (1980): Cattle 6,678, Sheep 1,562, Pigs 1,739, Goats 5,346.

Sea fishing (catch in metric tons): 544 in 1976; 481 in 1977; 475 in 1978.

THE CONSTITUTION

The Government of the U.S. Virgin Islands is organized under the provisions of the Organic Act of the Virgin Islands, passed by the Congress of the United States in 1936 and revised in 1954. Subsequent amendments provided for the election of a non-voting Virgin Islands delegate to the U.S. House of Representatives, commencing in 1968, and the popular election of the Governor of the Virgin Islands in 1970. Executive power is vested in a Governor who appoints, with the advice and consent of the Legislature, the heads of the executive departments and may also appoint administrative assistants as his representatives on St. John and St. Croix. Legislative power is vested in the Legislature of the Virgin Islands, a unicameral body composed of fifteen Senators elected by popular vote. Legislation is subject to the approval of the Governor. All residents of the islands, who are citizens of the United States and aged over 18, have the right to vote in local elections but not in national elections. In 1976 the Virgin Islands were granted the right to draft their own constitution, subject to the approval of the U.S. President and Congress. A constitution permitting a degree of autonomy was drafted in 1978 and gained the necessary approval but was then rejected by the people of the Virgin Islands in a referendum in March 1979. A fourth draft, providing for greater autonomy than the 1978 draft, was rejected in a referendum in November 1981.

THE GOVERNMENT

(February 1982)

UPPER VOLTA

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of Upper Volta is a landlocked state in West Africa, surrounded by Mali to the north, Niger to the east and Benin, Togo, Ghana and the Ivory Coast to the south. The climate is hot and mainly dry, with temperatures averaging 27°C (83°F); humidity reaches 80 per cent in the south during the rainy season, which occurs between June and October but is often very short. French is the official language and there are three principal native tongues with many dialects. The majority of the population follow animist beliefs, some 20 per cent are Muslims and about 10 per cent Christians, chiefly Roman Catholics. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) has three horizontal stripes of black, white and red. The capital is Ouagadougou.

Recent History

Formerly a province of French West Africa, Upper Volta became a self-governing republic within the French Community in December 1958 and achieved full independence on August 5th, 1960, with Maurice Yaméogo as President. In January 1966 the Army Chief of Staff, Lt.-Col. (later Gen.) Sangoulé Lamizana, deposed President Yaméogo, dissolved the National Assembly, suspended the constitution and assumed the position of Head of State. Restrictions on political activities were lifted in November 1969, and in June 1970 the Government introduced a new constitution which provided for a return to civilian rule after a four-year interim period of joint military and civilian administration. Elections for a National Assembly were held in December, and the Union démocratique voltaïque (UDV) won 37 of the 57 seats. In January 1971 the President appointed as Prime Minister the UDV leader, Gérard Ouédraogo.

In late 1973 differences between the Prime Minister and the Secretary-General of the UDV, Joseph Ouédraogo, led to deadlock between the Government and the National Assembly, and in February 1974 the President, Gen. Lamizana, announced that the army had assumed power again. The National Assembly was dismissed and replaced by a National Consultative Council for Renewal, with 65 members nominated by the President. In November 1977 a new Constitution was approved in a referendum. It provided for an elected President and a National Assembly, and for a return to democratic civilian rule. The ban on political parties had been lifted in October and seven parties registered to contest the elections.

Elections to the National Assembly were held in April 1978. The UDV won 28 of the 57 seats and the newly-formed Union nationale pour la défense de la démocratie (UNDD) won 13. In the Presidential elections, held in May, Gen. Lamizana defeated the leader of the UNDD, Macaire Ouédraogo, after two ballots. The seven parties grouped themselves into the three alliances in the Assembly, as required in the Constitution. The main opposition front was formed by the UNDD and the Union progressiste voltaïque (UPV), which had 22 seats against the UDV-RDA's 29. The remaining six were supporters of RDA. The new Government was formed in July, with Dr. Joseph Conombo as Prime Minister, but its task of governing the various groups and improving the economy was made difficult by the tacit hostility of the army and trade unions, and by the divisions in the National Assembly. Throughout 1979 the country suffered a series of strikes; in spite of general wage increases introduced by the Government at the beginning of the year.

In November 1980, following an eight-week strike by teachers and a three-day general strike, the Government of Gen. Lamizana was overthrown in a bloodless coup led by Col. Saye Zerbo, a former Foreign Minister during the previous period of military rule. A 31-member Comité militaire de redressement pour le progrès national (CMRPN) was set up, and a Government of National Recovery was formed in December, consisting of army officers and civilians. The Constitution was suspended and the National Assembly dissolved. Political parties and activities were banned and a curfew imposed. During 1981 Col. Zerbo faced increasing opposition from the unions, a conflict which culminated in the suspension of one of the union associations and the revocation of the right to strike between November 1981 and February 1982.

Government

The National Assembly was dissolved in November 1980. All legislative and executive power rests with the Government of National Recovery, headed by Col. Zerbo. The Council of Ministers consists of members of the armed forces and a number of civilian specialists. An 11-member Directing Committee within the Government consists of army officers and is led by Col. Zerbo. Local government is through ten départements, divided into 75 sub-prefectures.

Defence

Military service is compulsory and lasts for eighteen months. In July 1981 the armed forces numbered 3,775, including a small air force, and there were also about 1,850 in the national guard and gendarmérie. There were 900 men in paramilitary forces.

Economic Affairs

The economy is agricultural and over 80 per cent of the population are farmers or livestock-raising nomads. Settled agriculture is confined to the river valleys and oases and efforts are being made to extend the area of irrigated land. Agriculture accounts for between 30 and 35 per cent of G.D.P. The chief crops are sorghum, millet, yams, beans and maize, most of which are consumed within the country. Raw cotton, production of which rose from 18,000 metric tons in 1974 to 80,000 tons in 1980, is one of the main export crops, along with karité nuts and butter. A sugar processing complex at Banfora produced 31,000 tons of raw sugar in 1979 and 27,840 tons in 1980. Livestock and livestock products are the second major source of export revenue, accounting for 32 per cent of exports in 1979. Improvement programmes, begun in the early 1970s with international aid, aimed at controlling water supplies and irrigation, extending plantations of crops such as cotton and sugar cane, and improving stock-raising. The aid was, however, largely diverted to famine relief and emergency measures in a series of severe droughts which affected the whole Sahel region from 1968 to 1974. Normal rainfall during 1975/76 enabled considerable recovery in stock and crop levels, and a programme of reafforestation was started, but erratic rainfall patterns caused cereal deficits of 185,000 metric tons in 1977 and 73,000 tons in 1978. Total cereal production in 1980/81 was approximately 1 million tons, leaving a deficit of 94,000 tons. The current plan aims at production increases of 10-15 per cent per year. The shortages were exacerbated by hoarding, smuggling and bad distribution, and the resulting price rises caused the Government to make self-sufficiency in staple crops its primary object. It has also invested in ancillary services to livestock and attempted to eradicate a parasitic disease known as river blindness and so bring under cultivation the fertile Volta valleys which it infests. By June 1980 the disease had been reduced by between 10 and 20 per cent throughout the region. In 1981 it was announced that a National Commission for agrarian reform was to be set up, and projects included the creation of village co-operatives and cereal banks, the reform of state agricultural organizations and the provision of 7,000 water supply points.

UPPER VOLTA

There is almost no mining production, but current development projects aim to exploit large deposits of manganese at Tambao and include a railway extension and three dams at Kompienga, Nounbiel and Bagre. These infrastructural projects will also make possible development of other minerals, including limestone and phosphates. The Poura gold mine, which ceased production in 1966, reopened in 1981 with foreign loans, and production is expected to reach 180,000 tons of ore per year for ten years. Research into the mining potential of Upper Volta is to be intensified under the new regime. Industry contributes only 17 per cent of G.D.P. but fiscal incentives have successfully encouraged growth through foreign investment. The major concerns are food processing, tobacco and textiles. A cement factory at Ouagadougou, with a capacity of 150,000 tons, began the first stage of construction in 1981.

Between 1966 and 1975 the Government greatly improved its financial position by a policy of austerity. With French aid, which provided about 40 per cent of revenue, a budgetary surplus was maintained. Since 1975 the Government has pursued more expansionary financial policies to meet increasing needs of social and economic development and defence. Government expenditure rose by 50 per cent in 1975 and 30 per cent in 1976. In 1977 a special investment programme to improve water supplies and social services was launched with a budget of 5,000 million francs CFA and expenditure rose by 25 per cent. The Government depends on foreign sources for up to three-quarters of its national budget, and between 1975 and 1979 received $796 million in development aid. The Zerbo regime seeks to reduce the country's dependence on foreign aid. Upper Volta remains an exceptionally poor country even by Third World standards, G.N.P. per head averaging only U.S. $160 in 1980. Population density is high for a country with such poor resources. Several hundred thousand citizens leave annually to seek work in the Ivory Coast and emigrés total over 1,600,000. The economy relies heavily on their remittances from abroad. Emigration was forbidden in early 1981, pending negotiations to secure rights and better conditions for Voltaic workers in neighbouring countries.

Transport and Communications

The Abidjan-Niger railway, jointly operated with the Ivory Coast, extends for 517 km. into Upper Volta and gives an outlet to the sea at Abidjan (Ivory Coast). A 340-km. line linking the Tambao mine with Ouagadougou is under construction. Major roads are being built or improved, especially in the north-east. There are 8,714 km. of classified roads, open all the year round. The international airports are at Ouagadougou, which is being extended to handle larger aircraft, and Bobo-Dioulasso, and there are 47 airfields used for internal transport. The national airline is Air Volta and the country also has a share in Air Afrique.

Social Welfare

The Government provides hospitals and rural medical services. A special medical service for schools is in operation. In 1980 there were five main hospitals with 2,042 beds. In 1976 there were also 320 dispensaries and 100 doctors, one per 57,000 inhabitants. By 1981 658 villages were equipped with primary health centres, with a staff of 840 health officers and 575 midwives. An old-age and veterans' pension system was introduced in 1960, and extended workers' insurance schemes have been in operation since 1967. The development plan of the new regime includes the reform of the health system, and the need for nationally controlled pharmacies.

Education

Education is free but not compulsory. It was estimated that in 1980 about 17 per cent of children aged 6 to 11 years attended primary schools, while only about 2 per cent of those aged 12 to 17 were enrolled at secondary schools. There is a university in Ouagadougou, and government grants are available for higher education in European and African universities. In 1981 an Advanced School of Science and Medicine was opened in Ouagadougou for the training of indigenous medical personnel. A rural radio service has been established to further general and technical education in rural areas.

Tourism

The principal tourist attraction is big game hunting in the East and South West and along the river banks of the Black Volta. There is a wide variety of wild animals in the game reserves. Tourist arrivals totalled 30,148 in 1976 and over 43,000 in 1979. A government building programme is to bring the number of hotel rooms to 973 by 1983.

THE CONSTITUTION

Note: Following the military coup of November 25th, 1980, the 1977 Constitution was suspended.

The fourth Constitution of the Republic of Upper Volta was submitted to a referendum on November 27th, 1977, and approved by 98.7 per cent of votes cast. A summary of its principal provisions follows:

The Republic of Upper Volta is a democratic, secular and "social" republic. Sovereign power is vested in the people, and fundamental liberties, including freedom of speech, the right to hold property and the right to strike, are guaranteed.

The President of the Republic is elected by universal adult suffrage for a five-year term and may hold office for not more than two consecutive terms. He is the chief of the executive. He nominates the Prime Minister who must be accepted by the National Assembly, although he may dissolve the Assembly if it refuses to accept three successive candidates. He nominates the Council of Ministers on the advice of the Prime Minister. In the case of temporary incapacity or impeachment, the duties of the President are taken over by the Prime Minister.

* In June 1979 all political parties except those that had received the greatest number of votes in the elections of April 30th, 1978, were suppressed.

The National Assembly consists of 57 members elected by universal suffrage for a term of five years. It is the supreme legislative authority and has the power to impose taxes. The Assembly may pass a vote of censure on the Government; this vote must be carried by a two-thirds majority. The President of the Assembly is elected by its members for the duration of its term.

All registered political parties may contest elections but only three parties may sit in the National Assembly.* The three parties most successful at the polls participate in the National Assembly.

The Prime Minister is the leader of the Government and directs its policies.

The judiciary is independent.

Military personnel may stand for election to the National Assembly and may be chosen as members of the Council of Ministers but in both cases must be detached from their military duties for the duration of their office.

URUGUAY

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Eastern Republic of Uruguay lies on the south-east coast of South America, with Brazil to the north and Argentina to the west. The climate is temperate, with an average winter temperature of 14°-16°C (57°-61°F) and an average summer temperature of 21°-28°C (70°-82°F). The language is Spanish. There is no state religion but Roman Catholicism is predominant. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) has nine horizontal stripes (five white and four blue, alternating) with a square white canton, containing a golden sun, in the upper hoist. The capital is Montevideo.

Recent History

Since independence from Spain, gained in 1825, the political scene has been dominated by two parties; the Colorados (Liberals) and the Blancos (Conservatives). Their rivalry resulted in frequent outbreaks of civil war in the nineteenth century. Thanks to the progressive policies of José Batlle y Ordóñez, Colorado President from 1903 to 1907 and 1911 to 1915, Uruguay became the first welfare state in Latin America.

In December 1967 Jorge Pacheco Areco assumed the Presidency. His period in office was marked by massive increases in the cost of living, labour unrest and the spectacular exploits of the Tupamaro urban guerrilla movement. Elections were held in November 1971 and the official Colorado candidate, Juan María Bordaberry Arocena, was declared the winner, taking office in March 1972. The army took complete control of the campaign against the Tupamaros and by the end of 1973 had crushed the movement. Military intervention in civilian affairs led, in 1973, to the closure of Congress and its replacement by an appointed 25-member Council of State (subsequently increased to 35 members). The Communist Party and other left-wing groups were banned; repressive measures, including strict press censorship, continued. In September 1974 army officers were placed in control of the major state-owned enterprises.

President Bordaberry was deposed by the army in June 1976 because of his refusal to countenance any return, however gradual, to constitutional rule. In July the recently formed Council of the Nation elected Dr. Aparicio Méndez Manfredini to the presidency for five years. Despite the Government's announcement that there would be a return to democracy, persecution of political figures continued and the number of political prisoners held in 1976 is thought to have reached 6,000. Although the decision taken by the U.S.A. in 1979 to restore a fraction of its former military aid to Uruguay was governed by an easing of repression, the Red Cross reported in 1981 that some 1,100 political prisoners were still being held.

President Méndez introduced several constitutional amendments, known as Institutional Acts, to consolidate the internal situation and to create a "new order". By 1980 severe economic problems made the army anxious to return executive responsibility to civilian politicians. A new constitution, by which the military would continue to be involved in all matters of national security, was drafted and submitted to a plebiscite in November 1980 but was rejected by a 57.8 per cent "no" vote. Disappointed by this result, the military was forced to amend the draft constitution in consultation with leaders of the recognized political parties; and, in September 1981, a retired army general, Gregorio Alvarez Armellino, was appointed by the Joint Council of the Armed Forces to serve as President during the transition period to full civilian government. Internal party elections, in the form of presidential "primaries", are to be held in November 1982 in preparation for full presidential elections in early 1985.

Government

Uruguay has been ruled by a military-backed regime since Congress, the elected legislature, was dissolved in 1973. In place of Congress is the Council of State, with 35 members appointed by the executive power, namely the President and the Council of Ministers. The President is elected for a five-year term by the Council of the Nation, comprising the members of the Council of State and 20 high-ranking officers. There is also a National Security Council, under the chairmanship of the President, composed of selected Cabinet Ministers and the commanders-in-chief of the armed forces. In 1977 the judicature was placed under the direct control of the executive. For administrative purposes the country is divided into 19 Departments, each currently under the control of Government appointees.

Defence

In July 1981 the army consisted of 22,000 volunteers between the ages of 18 and 45 who contract for one or two years of service. There was a navy of 4,700 men and an air force of 3,000 men. There were also paramilitary forces of 1,500 men. Defence expenditure for 1978 was 727.6 million new pesos.

Economic Affairs

Livestock rearing, particularly cattle and sheep, is traditionally Uruguay's major industry. The 1974 EEC ban on meat imports encouraged the exploitation of new markets, and exports, which fell by 10 per cent in 1975 to 106,381 metric tons, rose to about 186,000 tons in 1976, the highest volume recorded for 50 years. Almost half of Uruguay's meat exports now go to Brazil. Wool production in 1980 amounted to 80,000 metric tons, the highest since the early 1960s. Uruguay's principal crops are wheat, maize, sorghum, sunflower seed, rice, linseed and potatoes. Agricultural production, which accounts for 12.5 per cent of the G.D.P., rose by 10.8 per cent in 1980, compared with 2.7 per cent in 1979. In 1978 Uruguay and Brazil concluded an agreement on a joint development plan to bring 67,000 square kilometres under cultivation; the 33,000 square kilometres in Uruguay will increase its agricultural land area by 20 per cent. In 1981 work began on the India Muerta dam, in the Department of Rocha, which, when completed, will provide irrigation for an area of 7,000 hectares.

Fishing is being strongly promoted by the Government as an important source of foreign currency earnings.

Production rose by nearly 45 per cent in 1978 and by 39 per cent in 1979. The IDB has granted a U.S. $27 million loan to help finance the construction of 18 fishing vessels and the new fishing port at La Palma, and to improve Uruguay's fish-processing capacity.

The principal industries are food processing (meat, sugar, milk; fruit, wine), hides and leather, textiles, construction, metallurgy and rubber. Between 1976 and 1980 the sector achieved an average annual growth rate of 5 per cent, owing to investment stimuli and government encouragement of export-oriented industries rather than import substitution. The main growth areas are the tannery and leather industry, electrical equipment, non-metallic minerals, metal products and food. A steel plant at Nueva Palmira, with an initial annual capacity of 40,000 metric tons, was planned for 1981 and will be supplied with electricity from the Salto Grande hydro-electric plant. As petroleum exploration has proved disappointing, development of electric energy is a priority. The share of oil in the import bill fell from 36 per cent in 1980 to 29 per cent in 1981, when the 1,800 MW hydro-electric plant at Salto Grande (part Argentine) reached full capacity. The 300 MW Palmar plant (part Brazilian) is due to be completed in 1983 and the output from these two plants should make Uruguay a net exporter of electric energy.

The Uruguayan economy began to recover from the stagnation of the 1960s and 1970s with an average annual G.D.P. growth of 3.2 per cent in 1974-78, 8.4 per cent in 1979 and 4.5 per cent in 1980. There are, however, formidable problems. Government encouragement of non-traditional exports since 1974 reduced the trade deficit from U.S. $173 million in 1975 to $88 million in 1978, but the deficit rose to $443 million in 1979 and an estimated $600 million in 1980. The current account balance showed a deficit of $402 million in 1979 and $800 million in 1980, and the gross foreign debt rose from $1,682 million in 1979 to $2,130 million in 1980. The problems were exacerbated in 1981 by events in neighbouring countries. Tourism, which grew by 22.6 per cent between 1979 and 1980, was badly hit by currency devaluations in Brazil and Argentina which meant that Uruguay could no longer be regarded as a cheap holiday resort. Exports also suffered from these devaluations and the introduction of tariff barriers in the two countries which traditionally, between them, have bought almost half of Uruguay's exports. Government economic measures aim to reduce the trade deficit by a series of financial and fiscal incentives, including the abolition of export tariffs for agriculture and fishing and the lowering of domestic interest rates for industry, to reduce the price of Uruguayan exports.

Uruguay is a member of ALADI, SELA, OAS and IADB.

Transport and Communications

The easy nature of the terrain and the small area of the country make for rapid communications within Uruguay and with neighbouring Argentina and Brazil. The new Paysandú-Colón and Fray-Bentos-Puerto Unzué road bridges have further improved communications with Argentina. The total length of roads in 1981 was about 45,000 km. of which 90 per cent were usable in all weathers.

The railways are state-owned and there were 3,004 km. of track in 1981. A line from Concordia to Salto, linking the Uruguayan and Argentine rail networks, was completed in 1981. Inland waterways are an important means of transport and cargo and passenger services operate on the rivers Plate and Uruguay, which are navigable for 560 km. International air services are provided by the national and a number of foreign airlines. The main airport is at Carrasco, 21 km. from Montevideo, and there are also airports at Paysandú and Rivera.

Social Welfare

Uruguay is noted for its advanced scheme of social welfare, which covers professional accidents, industrial diseases, sickness, old age, maternity and child welfare. Employment guarantees are in force and government subsidies are available for workers. The pension age is low (30 years' service, sometimes less); social charges faced by companies, however, are high (reaching 77.5 per cent for the construction industry and more than 100 per cent in the wool industry and ports). There are also laws governing the protection of minors and women in employment, insurance against suspension from work, annual licences, redundancy payments, etc. Grants for families are provided by the Family Subsidies Fund. In 1976 Uruguay had 64 government-run hospitals, with 11,946 beds, and in 1975 there were 3,983 physicians.

Education

All education, including university education, is free and primary and the first stage of secondary schooling are compulsory. The programmes of instruction are the same in both public and private schools, but private schools are subject to certain state controls. In 1978 illiteracy averaged 2.6 per cent for those between 10 and 44 years of age. There is one university.

Tourism

The sandy beaches and tropical swamps on the coast and the forests of the interior with their variety of wild life and vegetation provide the main tourist attractions. Tourism is developing rapidly, especially at Punta del Este. There were over 1 million visitors in 1979.

Public Holidays

1982: May 1st (Labour Day), May 18th (Battle of Las Piedras), June 19th (Birth of General Artigas), July 18th (Constitution Day), August 25th (National Independence Day), October 12th (Discovery of America), November 2nd (All Souls' Day), December 8th (Blessing of the Waters), December 25th (Christmas Day).

1983: January 1st (New Year's Day), January 6th (Epiphany), April 19th (Landing of the 33 Patriots).

Many business firms close during Carnival week (February 14th-19th, 1983) and Tourist week (Easter).

Exchange rates (December 1981): £1 sterling=22.08 new pesos; U.S. $1=11.48 new pesos.

1,000 new Uruguayan pesos=£45.29=$87.11.

Note: The new peso was introduced in July 1975, replacing the old peso at the rate of 1 new peso=1,000 old pesos. The exchange rate, linked to the U.S. dollar, has been frequently adjusted. Between 1959 and 1963 the rate was around 11 old pesos per dollar but since 1963 the currency has greatly depreciated. The average selling rates of old pesos per U.S. dollar were: 250 in 1969 and 1970; 260 in 1971; 563 in 1972; 875 in 1973; and 1,216 in 1974. In April 1975 the rates were fixed at $1=2,300 old pesos (buying) or 2,330 old pesos (selling), so the initial exchange rates for the new currency were $1=2.30 pesos (buying) or 2.33 pesos (selling). Further devaluations have occurred since September 1975. The average selling rate (new pesos per U.S. dollar) was: 2.299 in 1975; 3.395 in 1976; 4.750 in 1977; 6.125 in 1978; 7.918 in 1979; 9.160 in 1980.

THE CONSTITUTIONSummary

Note: The elected General Assembly (Congress) was dissolved in June 1973 and the elected President was deposed by the armed forces in June 1976. New institutions, for which the Constitution does not provide, have been created by additional legislation and several Institutional Acts have been promulgated dealing with the functions of the executive and the judiciary. The draft constitution rejected in a national plebiscite in November 1980 was subsequently amended by consultation with the recognized political parties. It provides for the holding of presidential elections in 1985, following presidential primaries in November 1982, when registered parties will be entitled to elect up to four candidates.

The present constitution of Uruguay was ratified by plebiscite on November 27th, 1966, when the country voted to return to the presidential form of government after fifteen years of "collegiate" government. The main items of the Constitution are as follows:

General Provisions

Uruguay shall have a democratic republican form of government, sovereignty being exercised directly by the Electoral Body in cases of election, by initiative or by referendum, and indirectly by representative powers established by the constitution, according to the rules set out therein.

There shall be freedom of religion; there is no state religion; property shall be inviolable; there shall be freedom of thought. Anyone may enter Uruguay. There are two forms of citizenship: natural, being persons born in Uruguay or of Uruguayan parents, and legal, being people established in Uruguay with at least three years' residence in the case of those with family, and five years' for those without family. Every citizen has the right and obligation to vote.

Legislature

Legislative power is vested in the General Assembly, made up of two houses, which may act separately or together according to the dispositions of the constitution. It elects in joint session the members of the Supreme Court of Justice, of the Electoral Court, Tribunals, Administrative Litigation and the Accounts Tribunal.

Elections for both houses, the President and the Vice-President and the departmental governments shall take place every five years on the last Sunday in November; sessions of the Assembly begin on March 15th each year and last until December 15th (October 15th in election years, in which case the new Assembly takes office on February 15th). Extraordinary sessions can be called only in case of extreme urgency.

Chamber of Representatives

The Chamber of Representatives has 99 members elected by direct suffrage by the people according to the system of proportional representation, with at least two representatives to each Department. The number of representatives can be altered by law by a two-thirds majority in both houses. Their term of office is five years and they must be over 25 and natural citizens or legal citizens with 5 years' exercise of their citizenship. The members have the right to bring accusations against any member of the Government or judiciary for violation of the Constitution or any other serious offence.

Senate

The Senate is made up of 30 members, elected directly by the people by proportional representation on the same lists as the representatives, for a term of 5 years. They must be natural citizens or legal citizens with seven years' exercise of their rights, and be over 30 years of age. The Senate is responsible for bearing any cases brought by the representatives and can deprive a guilty person of his post by a two-thirds majority.

The Executive

Executive power is exercised by the President and the Council of Ministers. There shall be a Vice-President, who shall also be President of the General Assembly and of the Senate. The President and Vice-President are elected by simple majority of the people by means of the system of double simultaneous vote, and remain in office for five years. They must be over 35 and natural citizens of Uruguay.

The Council of Ministers is made up of the office holders in the 11 ministries or their deputies, and is responsible for all acts of government and administration. It is presided over by the President of the Republic who has a vote.

The Judiciary

Judicial Power shall be exercised by the Supreme Court of 5 members and by Tribunals and local courts; members of the Supreme Court must be over 40, natural citizens, or legal citizens with 10 years' exercise and 25 years' residence, and must be lawyers of 10 years' standing, 8 of them in public or fiscal ministry or judicature. Members serve for 10 years and can be re-elected after a break of 5 years. The Court nominates all other judges and judicial officials.

THE GOVERNMENTHEAD OF STATE

President: Lt.-Gen. (ret'd.) GREGORIO CONRADO ALVAREZ ARMELLINO (took office September 1st, 1981).

COUNCIL OF MINISTERS

(February 1982)

CONSEJO DE LA NACIÓN (Council of the Nation)

The Council of the Nation was established in June 1976. It comprises the 35 members of the Council of State and 20 high-ranking officers of the Armed Forces, including the Commanders-in-Chief. The Council deals mainly with constitutional and electoral issues and selects the President.
President: Dr. HAMLET REYES.

CONSEJO DE ESTADO (Council of State)

The Council of State came into existence in December

1973, replacing Congress which was dissolved in June 1973. It has 35 members appointed by the executive power.

President: Dr. HAMLET REYES.

CONSEJO DE SEGURIDAD NACIONAL (National Security Council)

Chairman: President GREGORIO C. ALVAREZ ARMELLINO.

Members: Minister of Defence, Minister of the Interior, Minister of Foreign Affairs, Commanders-in-Chief of the Navy, Army and Air Force.

Permanent Secretary: Brig.-Gen. WALTHER MACHADO, Chief of the Joint General Staff.

POLITICAL PARTIES

In 1973 all left-wing parties which formed the Frente Amplio electoral coalition were declared illegal. A total ban on all political activity was announced in 1976, partially lifted in July 1980, although 300 people remained deprived of all political rights, and reimposed in December. A statute of September providing for the recognition of non-Marxist parties was also cancelled.

The names of the two principal parties derive from the flags of the civil war of 1836, namely Blanco and Colorado. By tradition the Blanco Party is conservative and the Colorado Party more liberal.

Partido Colorado: The Party, which depends for its support largely on the urban area, controlled the executive for 94 years until the elections of 1958. It regained control in 1967 when Gen. GESTIDO became President under the new Constitution. In the elections of November 1971, there were two Colorado candidates. JUAN MARÍA BORDABERRY was the nominee of the outgoing President, JORGE PACHECO ARECO. JORGE BATLLE IBÁÑEZ, leader of the splinter group, Unidad y Reforma, obtained fewer votes than Sr. BORDABERRY and his votes were added to the BORDABERRY vote for the purpose of selecting the President.

Partido Nacional (Blanco): Leader CARLOS PEREIRA. The Party, with its substantially rural support, won the 1958 and 1962 elections but lost in 1966. In 1971 the Party's presidential candidate was WILSON FERREIRA ALDUNATE, who was narrowly defeated (subsequently leader in exile).

Unión Cívica: recognized Christian democrat faction which split from the Partido Demócrata Cristiano (see below) in 1980.

Parties still not officially recognized include:

Convergencia Democrática en Uruguay (CDU): f. 1980; broad opposition front of all parties; Pres. JUAN RAÚL FERREIRA.

Partido Demócrata Cristiano (PDC): formerly Unión Cívica del Uruguay; f. 1962; Pres. Arq. JUAN PABLO TERRA.

Partido Comunista: Leader ALBERTO ALTESOR; Sec.-Gen. RODNEY ARISMENDI (in exile).

Partido Socialista: Sec.-Gen. JOSÉ PEDRO CARDOZO.

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

Institutional Act 8, promulgated in July 1977, places the administration of the judiciary under the direct control of the executive. A Ministry of Justice was created and is to be responsible for relations between the executive and the judiciary and other jurisdictional entities except military ones. The judges are independent of the Ministry.

The Court of Justice is made up of five members appointed by the Council of the Nation at the suggestion of the executive, for a period of five years. It has original jurisdiction in constitutional, international and admiralty cases, and hears appeals from the appellate courts, of which there are seven, each with three judges.

Cases involving the functioning of the State administration are heard in the ordinary Administrative Courts, and in the Supreme Administrative Court which consists of five members appointed in the same way as members of the Court of Justice.

In Montevideo there are 19 civil courts, 10 criminal and correctional courts, 19 courts presided over by justices of the peace, three juvenile courts, three labour courts and courts for government and other cases. Each departmental capital, and some other cities, has a departmental court; each of the 224 judicial divisions has a justice of the peace.

VANUATU

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of Vanuatu, formerly the New Hebrides, comprises an irregular archipelago of some 70 islands in the south-west Pacific Ocean about 1,000 km. west of Fiji and 400 km. north-east of New Caledonia, and stretching over a distance of about 800 km. from north to south. The climate is oceanic tropical, with a season of south-east trade winds between May and October. Winds are variable with occasional cyclones for the rest of the year and annual rainfall varies between 2,300 mm. in the south and 3,900 mm. in the north. At Port Vila, in the centre of the group, mean temperatures vary between 22° and 27°C. The national language is Bislama, ni-Vanuatu pidgin. There are many Melanesian languages and dialects. English, French and Bislama are the official languages. The population is mainly Christian. The flag consists of two horizontal stripes, red above green, on which are superimposed a black-edged yellow horizontal "Y" and, at the hoist, a black triangle containing two crossed green leaves on a curled yellow boar's tusk. The capital is Port Vila on the island of Efate.

Recent History

During the 19th century the New Hebrides (now Vanuatu) were settled by British and French missionaries, planters and traders. The United Kingdom and France established a Joint Naval Commission for the islands in 1887. The two countries later agreed on a joint civil administration and in 1906 the territory became the Anglo-French Condominium of the New Hebrides (Nouvelles-Hébrides). Under this arrangement there were three elements in the structure of administration: the British National Service, the French National Service and the Condominium (Joint) Departments. Each power was responsible for its own citizens and other non-New Hebrideans who chose to be "ressortissants" of either power. Indigenous New Hebrideans were not permitted to claim either British or French citizenship. The result of this was two official languages, two police forces, three public services, three courts of law, three currencies, three national budgets, two resident commissioners in Port Vila, the capital, and two district commissioners in each of the four Districts.

Local political initiatives began after the Second World War and originated in New Hebridean concern over the alienation of native land. More than 36 per cent of the New Hebrides was owned by foreigners. Na-Griamel, one of the first political groups to emerge, had its source in cult-like activities. In 1971 Na-Griamel leaders petitioned the United Nations to prevent more land sales at a time when land was being sold to American interests for development as tropical tourist resorts. In 1972 the New Hebrides National Party was formed with support from Protestant missions and covert support from British interests. In response French interests formed the Union des Communautés Néo-Hébridaises in 1974. Discussions in London in 1974 resulted in the replacement of the Advisory Council, set up in 1957, by a Representative Assembly of 42 members, of whom 29 were directly elected in November 1975. The Assembly did not hold its first full working session until November 1976 and it was dissolved in early 1977 following a boycott by the National Party, which had changed its name to the Vanuaaku Party (VP) in 1976. However, the VP reached an agreement with the Condominium powers on new elections for the Representative Assembly, based on universal suffrage for all seats.

In July 1977 it was announced at a conference in Paris between British, French and New Hebrides representatives, that the islands would become independent in 1980 following a referendum and elections. The VP boycotted this conference, as they demanded immediate independence. The VP also boycotted the elections held in November and declared a "People's Provisional Government". Nevertheless, a reduced Assembly of 39 members was elected and a measure of self-government was introduced early in 1978. A Council of Ministers and the office of Chief Minister (occupied by Georges Kalsakau) were created, and the French, British and Condominium Services were being replaced by a single New Hebrides Public Service. The VP declined to participate in the new Government at first, but in December 1978 a Government of National Unity was formed with Father Gérard Leymang as Chief Minister.

In September 1979 a conference was held to draw up a constitution. Agreement was reached, after considerable difficulties, over electoral systems and the role of the Head of State, and independence was finally scheduled for July 1980. In November 1979 new elections were held which resulted in the VP's winning 26 of the 39 seats in the Assembly. The outcome brought about a riot by Na-Griamel supporters on Espiritu Santo who threatened non-Santo "foreigners". Father Walter Lini, leader of the VP, was elected Chief Minister.

In June 1980 Jimmy Stevens, the Na-Griamel leader, declared Santo independent of the rest of the New Hebrides, styling it the "Independent State of Vemarana". Members of his movement, armed with bows and arrows and allegedly assisted by French colons and backed by private American business interests, moved to the coast and imprisoned government officers and police who were later released and allowed to leave the island, together with other European and indigenous public servants. In mid-June 200 British Royal Marines arrived in the capacity of a peace-keeping force, a move strongly criticized by the French, who would not permit Britain's unilateral use of force on Espiritu Santo.

In mid-July, however, agreement was reached between the two condominium powers and Walter Lini, and the New Hebrides became independent within the Commonwealth, under the name of Vanuatu, as planned, on July 30th, 1980, with the contingents of British and French troops maintaining a semblance of peace in Luganville on Santo. Shortly after independence, the Republic of Vanuatu signed a defence pact with Papua New Guinea, and in August units of the Papua New Guinea Defence Force replaced the British and French troops and arrested the rebels.

In February 1981 the French ambassador to Vanuatu was expelled following the deportation from New Caledonia of the VP secretary-general, who was due to attend an assembly of the New Caledonian Independence Front. France immediately withdrew aid to Vanuatu, but when relations between the countries improved in March, a $A6.9 million aid agreement was signed and a new ambassador appointed. In September 1981 Vanuatu became the 155th member of the United Nations.

Government

Vanuatu is a republic. Legislative power is vested in a 39-member unicameral Parliament elected by universal suffrage for four years. The Head of State is the President, elected for a five-year term by an electoral college consisting of Parliament and the Presidents of the Regional Councils. Executive power is vested in the Council of Ministers, appointed by the Prime Minister and responsible to Parliament. The Prime Minister is elected by and from members of Parliament.

Economic Affairs

Much of the land is mountainous and covered with natural forest, so cultivation is generally restricted to coastal plains and the low plateaux. About 80 per cent of the population live in rural areas and practise subsistence gardening, the main crops being coconuts, yams, taro, cassava, breadfruit and vegetables.

Copra, fish and beef constitute Vanuatu's main export commodities, although copra production fell sharply in 1980, owing partly to a need to replace ageing coconut trees. Although much of the country's valuable timber has been removed in recent years, an active and successful forestry development programme is now under way, and new plantations have been established with South American hardwoods. Cattle farming is expanding rapidly and about 800 tons of beef are exported annually, mainly from the abattoir on Santo.

Fishing is one of the mainstays of Vanuatu's economy. The South Pacific Fishing Company, a Japanese-controlled operation, receives tuna from 50 vessels for freezing at its storage base on Santo. The annual catch of about 8,000 tons is exported, mostly to the U.S.A. Manufacturing industry is based on the processing of the nation's primary products, but the Government is also promoting a number of small-scale import-substitution industries. Food and drink, manufactured goods and fuels are the main imports and the principal overall trading partners are Australia, France and Japan.

Tourism is an important industry in Vanuatu, and is expected to benefit from the formation of Air Vanuatu, the nation's small international airline, in 1981. Domestic tax revenue is derived mainly from import duties and in 1979 the estimated invisible export earnings from the use by about 500 overseas companies of the "tax haven" facility, reached 450 million vatu, thus making it the fourth largest source of foreign exchange. In Port Vila a financial centre has developed within the framework of British company law, and a shipping register was established in 1981, offering a "flag of convenience". Inflation in Vanuatu was 18 per cent in 1980, after an annual rate of about 5 per cent in 1977-79.

Transport and Communications

Roads on the islands are unsealed except for 35 km. of sealed roads, mostly on Efate Island. An internal airline provides a regular service to 21 small airfields while small shipping vessels provide a frequent, but mostly unscheduled, inter-island service. External services operate through Port Vila and Santo, each of which has an international airfield and a deepwater port. There is a 24-hour telex, telegram and telephone service. Port Vila and Luganville are linked by VHF telephone and this service is being extended to all the other islands.

Social Welfare

Medical care is provided through a network of hospitals, health centres, clinics and dispensaries. The Government does not provide a free medical service and patients still pay a nominal fee. In 1975 the islands had 28 hospitals, with 924 beds.

Education

Education is provided by the Government for a nominal fee. The principal languages of instruction are English and French. In 1980 there were 161 English language primary schools and 115 French language primary schools, and five and three secondary schools in these respective languages. There is one technical training facility in the capital and students undergo higher education either at the University of the South Pacific in Fiji or at the University of Papua New Guinea, or in France. Teacher training in English and French is available in Vanuatu.

Tourism

Tourism is an increasingly important foreign exchange earner, although the rebellion on Espiritu Santo has been blamed for a temporary decline in visitor arrivals, from 30,454 in 1979 to 21,973 in 1980. In addition, an average of 40,000 tourists from cruise-ships call every year. In 1980 there were 10 hotels in Port Vila and South Efate, offering a total of 404 rooms. There are limited tourist facilities outside the capital.

Public Holidays

1982: May 3rd (Labour Day), May 20th (Ascension), July 30th (Independence Day), August 15th (Assumption), October 5th (Constitution Day), November 29th (Unity Day), December 25-27th (Christmas).

1983: January 1st (New Year), April 1st-4th (Easter).

Currency and Exchange Rates

100 centimes = 1 vatu.

Exchange rates (December 1981):

£1 sterling = 174.97 vatu;

U.S. $1 = 90.96 vatu.

STATISTICAL SURVEY

Area: 5,700 sq. miles (14,763 sq. km.).

Population (Census of January 15th, 1979): 112,596; Port Vila (capital) 17,367 (June 30th, 1976).

Agriculture: 95,000 hectares are cultivated; there are 16,000 hectares of forest. Production (1980—metric tons, FAO estimates): coconuts 346,000, copra 50,000, meat 4,000.

Livestock (1980—FAO estimates): Cattle 90,000, Pigs 67,000, Goats 7,000, Poultry 150,000.

Fishing: Total catch 8,000 metric tons per year (FAO estimate).

Mining (output in '000 metric tons): Manganese ore (gross weight): 45.2 in 1976; 27.5 in 1977; 24.7 in 1978; 12.1 in 1979.

Finance: 100 centimes = 1 vatu, formerly the New Hebrides franc (franc néo-hébridais or FNH). Coins: 1, 2, 5, 10, 20, 50 vatu. Notes: 100, 500, 1,000 vatu. Exchange rates (December 1981): £1 sterling = 174.97 vatu; U.S. $1 = 90.96 vatu; 1,000 vatu = £5.72 = $10.99.

Note: Until the end of 1980 the FNH and Australian currency were both legal tender. On January 1st, 1981, the FNH was renamed the vatu and became the sole official currency. The FNH was linked to French currency and from August 1969 had a value of 6.1875 French centimes. This valuation remained in effect until September 1981, when the link with French currency was ended and the vatu was tied to the IMF Special Drawing Right at a rate of 1 SDR = 106.2 vatu.

Budget: (1980 estimate): Expenditure 2,682 million vatu. Almost a third of this was allocated to education. Revenue 2,682 million vatu from local sources and in aid from France and the U.K. Locally raised revenue was expected to total 1,520 million vatu, almost 60 per cent of it from custom duties. There are no direct or company taxes.

THE CONSTITUTION

A new Constitution came into effect on July 30th, 1980, when Vanuatu achieved independence. The main provisions are described below.

The Republic of Vanuatu is a sovereign democratic state, of which the Constitution is the supreme law. Bislama is the national language and the official languages are Bislama, English and French. The Constitution guarantees protection of all fundamental rights and freedoms and provides for the determination of citizenship.

The President, as head of the Republic, symbolizes the unity of the Republic and is elected for a five-year term of office by secret ballot by an electoral college consisting of Parliament and the Presidents of the Regional Councils.

Legislative power resides in the single-chamber Parliament consisting of members elected for four years on the basis of universal franchise through an electoral system which includes an element of proportional representation to ensure fair representation of different political groups and opinions. Parliament is presided over by a Speaker elected by the members. Executive power is vested in the Council of Ministers which consists of the Prime Minister (elected by Parliament from among its members) and other Ministers (appointed by the Prime Minister from among the members of Parliament). The number of Ministers, including the Prime Minister, may not exceed a quarter of the number of members of Parliament.

Special attention is paid to custom law and to decentralization. The Constitution states that all land in the Republic belongs to the indigenous custom owners and their descendants. There is a National Council of Chiefs, composed of custom chiefs elected by their peers sitting in District Councils of Chiefs. It may discuss all matters relating to custom and tradition and may make recommendations to Parliament for the preservation and promotion of the culture and languages of Vanuatu. The Council may be consulted on any question in connection with any bill before Parliament. Each region may elect a regional council and the Constitution lays particular emphasis on the representation of custom chiefs within each one.

The Constitution also makes provision for public finance, the Public Service, the Ombudsman, a leadership code and the judiciary (see Judicial System).

THE GOVERNMENT

HEAD OF STATE

President: Ati 'GEORGE SOKOMANU, M.B.E. (took office July 30th, 1980).

COUNCIL OF MINISTERS

(January 1982)

Prime Minister: Hon. Fr. WALTER HAYDE LINI, C.B.E.

Minister for Home Affairs and Deputy Prime Minister: Hon. F. TIMAKATA.

Minister of Education: HON. DONALD KALPOKAS.

Minister of Finance: HON. KALPOKOR KALSAKAU.

Minister of Agriculture, Forestry and Fisheries: SETHY REGENVANU.

Minister of Health: HON. WIVIE KORISA.

Minister of Transport, Communications and Public Works:
HON. JOHN NAUPA.

The Court of Appeal is constituted by two or more judges of the Supreme Court sitting together.

Persons knowledgeable in custom may sit with the judges of the Supreme Court or the Court of Appeal and take part in the proceedings.

The Constitution of 1980 states that "Parliament shall provide for the establishment of village or island courts with jurisdiction over customary and other matters and shall provide for the role of chiefs in such courts".

LEGISLATURE

PARLIAMENT

Vanuatu's first Parliament was formed by the pre-independence Representative Assembly. After the elections in December 1979, the Vanuaaku Pati held 26 of the 39 seats.

Speaker: MAXIME CARLOT.

Leader of the Opposition: VINCENT BOULEKONE.

POLITICAL PARTY

Vanuaaku Pati (VP): Port Vila; f. 1972 (formerly the National Party); Government party; Pres. Father WALTER LINI.

DIPLOMATIC REPRESENTATION

EMBASSIES AND HIGH COMMISSIONS
ACCREDITED TO VANUATU
(HC) High Commission.

Australia: Melitco House, P.O.B. 111, Port Vila (HC).

Belgium: Wellington, New Zealand.

Canada: Canberra, A.C.T., Australia (HC).

Fiji: Suva, Fiji; roving ambassador.

France: Port Vila; Ambassador: MARC MENGUY.

Germany, Federal Republic: Port Moresby, Papua New Guinea.

Japan: Suva, Fiji.

Korea, Republic: Canberra, Australia.

New Zealand: Honiara, Solomon Islands (HC).

Spain: Canberra, A.C.T., Australia.

United Kingdom: Melitco House, rue Pasteur, P.O.B. 567, Port Vila (HC); High Commissioner: R. B. DORMAN.

Vanuatu also has diplomatic relations with the Democratic People's Republic of Korea.

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

The Supreme Court has unlimited jurisdiction to hear and determine any civil or criminal proceedings. It consists of a Chief Justice, appointed by the President of the Republic after consultation with the Prime Minister and the leader of the opposition, and three other judges who are appointed by the President of the Republic, one being nominated by the President of the National Council of Chiefs, and one being nominated by the Presidents of the Regional Councils.

RELIGION

Most of the inhabitants are Christian. Eight churches and groups are represented, including Presbyterian, Anglican, Seventh Day Adventist and Churches of Christ. The Roman Catholic Church is also well established.

Church of Melanesia: Anglican; Bishop of Vanuatu: Rt. Rev. HARRY S. TEVI, Luganville, Santo.

Roman Catholic: Bishop of Port Vila: Most Rev. FRANCIS LAMBERT, S.M.; P.O.B. 59, Port Vila.

THE PRESS

There are no independent daily or weekly newspapers.

Le Melanésien: Port Vila; in French.

Tam-Tam: Government Information Dept., Port Vila; f. 1980; fortnightly; Bislama, English and French; circ. 1,000.

Voice of Vanuatu: Port Vila; in English.

RADIO

Radio Vanuatu: P.O.B. 49, Port Vila; f. 1966; government-owned; broadcasts in English, French and Bislama; Man. J. CARLO.

In 1978 there were 15,500 receivers.

FINANCE

The republic has no personal income tax nor tax on company profits and is therefore developing rapidly as a finance centre and "tax haven".

BANKING

There are eight commercial banks in the capital.

DEVELOPMENT BANKS

Development Bank of Vanuatu: P.O.B. 241, Port Vila; f. 1979; cap. and dep. 200m. vatu (1981); Gen. Man. CAMILLE BASTIEN.

Caisse Centrale de Coopération Economique (France): Port Vila; provides finance for certain types of project.

FOREIGN BANKS

Banque de l'Indochine et de Suez (France): P.O.B. 29, Port Vila.

Barclays Bank International Ltd. (U.K.): P.O.B. 123, Port Vila; Man. E. J. CRUTCHLEY.

Australia and New Zealand Banking Group Ltd., Bank of New South Wales (Australia) and Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corpn. (Hong Kong) also have branches in Vanuatu.

TRADE AND INDUSTRYCO-OPERATIVES

There are more than 300 co-operative primary societies in Vanuatu and at least 85 per cent of the distribution of goods in the islands is done by co-operative organizations. Almost all rural ni-Vanuatu are members of a co-operative society (through family membership), as are many urban dwellers also.

Co-operative Federation: Port Vila; the principal apex society; alone handles 75 per cent of consumer goods distribution in the outer islands as well as operating a large shipping service and a savings bank.

TRANSPORTROADS

In 1980 there were about 1,000 km. of roads, 35 km. of which were sealed.

SHIPPING

The principal ports are Port Vila and Santo.

Vanua Navigation S.A.R.L.: Port Vila; f. 1977 by the Co-operative Federation and Sofrana Unilines.

The following services call regularly at Vanuatu: Compagnie Générale Maritime, Daiwa Line and Pacific Navigation of Tonga from Sydney and other Pacific Islands; China Navigation Co. from Australia, Hong Kong, Taiwan and Singapore; Kyowa Shipping Co. from Hong Kong, Japan and the Republic of Korea; Sofrana-Unilines from New Caledonia and Solomon Islands; Bank Line from the United Kingdom, the Netherlands and the Federal Republic of Germany. Royal Viking Line and P. & O. cruises also call at Vanuatu.

CIVIL AVIATION

The principal airports are Bauerfield (Efate) and Pekoia (Santo).

Air Melanesiae: Air Melanesiae House, P.O.B. 72, Port Vila; f. 1966; operates scheduled flights to 21 destinations within the archipelago; charters and aerial scenic tours are available on request; Gen. Man. Capt. H. O. Tschuchnigg; fleet of 4 Britten Norman Islanders, 1 Trislander and 1 De Havilland Twin Otter Series 300.

Air Vanuatu: Air Melanesiae House, Kumul Highway, Port Vila; f. 1981; flies from Port Vila to Sydney; operates 1 DC-9.

Vanuatu is also served by Air Nauru, Air Pacific Ltd. (Fiji) and UTA (France).

VENEZUELA

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of Venezuela lies on the north coast of South America, bordered by Colombia to the west, Guyana to the east and Brazil to the south. The climate varies with altitude from tropical to temperate, the average temperature in Caracas being 21°C (69°F). The language is Spanish. There is no state religion, but most of the population is Roman Catholic. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) has three horizontal stripes of yellow, blue and red, with seven five-pointed white stars, arranged in a semi-circle, in the centre of the blue stripe. The state flag has, in addition, the national coat of arms in the top left-hand corner. The capital is Caracas.

Recent History

Venezuela was a Spanish colony from 1499 until 1821 and, under the leadership of Simón Bolívar, achieved independence in 1830. The country was governed principally by dictators until 1945 when a military-civilian coup replaced Isaias Medina Angarita by Rómulo Betancourt as head of a revolutionary junta. Colonel (later Gen.) Marcos Pérez Jiménez seized power in December 1952 and took office as President in 1953. He remained in office until 1958 when he was overthrown by a military junta under Admiral Wolfgang Larrazábal. Rómulo Betancourt was elected President in the same year.

The Constitution now in force was promulgated in 1961. Three years later President Betancourt became the first Venezuelan President to complete his term of office. Dr. Raúl Leoni was elected President in December 1963. Supporters of ex-President Pérez staged an abortive military uprising in 1966. Dr. Rafael Caldera Rodríguez became Venezuela's first Christian Democratic President in March 1969. He succeeded in stabilizing the country politically and economically, although political assassinations and abductions committed by underground organizations continued into 1974. In elections in December 1973 Carlos Andrés Pérez Rodríguez, candidate of Acción Democrática, the main opposition party, was chosen as successor to President Caldera. The Government's policy was to invest heavily in agriculture and industrial development to create a more balanced economy, and to nationalize important sectors. The presidential elections of December 1978 were won by the Partido Social-Cristiano (COPEI) leader, Dr. Luis Herrera Campins, who took office in March 1979. As his party did not obtain an overall majority in the Congress at the simultaneous general elections, President Herrera Campins sought an alliance with the smaller parties, particularly the Unión Republicana Democrática, in order to pass legislation.

In 1981 the political scene was dominated by leadership struggles within the two main parties, COPEI and Acción Democrática. These, together with social problems such as unemployment and the housing shortage, were undermining confidence in the Government, whose position had previously been strengthened by the economic boom brought about by the growth of the petroleum sector. In August 1980 the Presidents of Venezuela and Mexico announced their energy aid plan for the poorer countries of the Caribbean and Central America.

The 1970 Port of Spain Protocol, declaring a 12-year moratorium on the issue of Venezuela's claim to a large area of Guyana west of the Essequibo river, expires in June 1982, when the matter will be referred to international arbitration. Relations between the two countries were further strained in December 1981, when the Guyanese ambassador in Caracas was recalled in protest over Venezuela's refusal to sell Guyana oil under the favourable terms accorded to most other Caribbean countries. Another unresolved issue is the dispute with Colombia over the maritime boundary in the Gulf of Venezuela.

Government

Venezuela is a federal republic comprising 20 states, two Federal Territories and a Federal District (containing the capital). Under the 1961 Constitution, legislative power is held by the bicameral National Congress, with a Senate (44 elected members plus ex-Presidents of the Republic) and a Chamber of Deputies (199 members). Executive authority rests with the President. Senators, Deputies and the President are all elected for five years by universal adult suffrage. The President has wide powers and appoints a Council of Ministers to assist him. Each state has an executive Governor, appointed by the President, and an elected legislature.

Defence

Military service is selective for 18 months between the ages of 18 and 45. In July 1981 the armed forces numbered 40,800 men: an army of 27,000 men, a navy of 9,000 men (including 4,500 marines) and an air force of 4,800 men. There were para-military forces of 20,000 men. Defence expenditure for 1981 was 4,800 million bolívares.

Economic Affairs

Venezuela's most important economic activity is petroleum production. For many years, until 1970, the country was the world's third largest producer, and the leading exporter of petroleum and its derivatives. Production fell slightly from 2.35 million b.p.d. in 1979 to 2.10 million b.p.d. in 1980 and, following an OPEC agreement to cut production by 10 per cent, averaged only 2.07 million b.p.d. in 1981. Petroleum accounted for 95 per cent of export earnings in 1981. The oil industry was nationalized in January 1976 and is to receive government investment of U.S. $1,500 million per year between 1978 and 1988. The Orinoco tar belt with reserves estimated at 700,000 million barrels in 1977 (actual reserves may be three or four times this figure), has the potential to make Venezuela the world's largest oil producer. The continuous steam injection plant at El Jobo came into operation in March 1981 and a 60,000 b.p.d. processing plant is to be built near Barcelona in the state of Monagas.

Industrial diversification, to reduce dependence on petroleum, is a high government priority. The main development area is Ciudad Guayana, encompassing a steel complex, two aluminium plants, a tractor factory, bauxite and gold mining, a timber reserve and the Guri dam complex on the Caroni river. This complex should be completed in 1988 and will provide 9,000 MW of electric power. Aluminium has replaced iron ore as the second export industry. Recent discoveries of 500 million tons of bauxite mean that Venezuelan aluminium plants can be supplied entirely with local bauxite. Venezuela is also rich in diamonds, gold, zinc, copper, lead, silver, phosphates, manganese and titanium, and efforts are being made to exploit these resources fully. Production of fertilizers increased by 39 per cent in 1980, when the plant at Puerto Morón reached full capacity.

Agriculture, which employs about 18.5 per cent of the labour force and accounts for less than 10 per cent of the G.D.P., is not sufficiently productive to meet the country's food requirements. Only 5 per cent of arable land is used and three quarters of that is devoted to pasture. The chief crops are sugar cane, bananas, maize, rice, coffee, cocoa and cotton, and in 1981 there were record yields of sorghum, beans and groundnuts. A major share of oil revenues since 1974 has been spent on agriculture, and in 1980 production increased by 6 per cent, compared with only 3.7 per cent in 1979. In 1981, however, torrential rains and flooding severely affected some 20 per cent of total cultivated land and production fell by 2.8 per cent. The coffee and sugar crops were worst hit and the Government was forced to import emergency food supplies.

Venezuela's traditional current balance of payments surplus became a deficit for the first time in 1977. The deficit reached U.S. $5,735 million in 1978, mostly because of enormous public expenditure on ambitious development programmes, but a small surplus was recorded in 1979. The surplus rose to $4,241 million in 1980, when oil prices were high and thus offset deficits in other sectors of the economy. However, with inflation at over 20 per cent, President Herrera Campíns announced that his government would impose austerity measures to counteract the heavy spending of the previous government and would place emphasis on developing agriculture and social services rather than heavy industry.

The average growth in G.D.P. between 1974 and 1978 was 9 per cent annually. The 1979 economic stabilization plan was expected to reduce this to 6 per cent but, owing to an unexpected recession in the motor industry, the G.D.P. decreased by 1.2 per cent in 1980. There was a slight improvement in 1981, with the best growth rates being achieved in manufacturing, services and finance. Restrictions on the money supply in 1981 limited economic expansion but inflation was brought down to 11.3 per cent. Business confidence is gradually being restored and private investment is increasing. The 1982 budget was set at 86,135 million bolívares, 70 per cent of which was to come from petroleum revenue.

The 1981-85 National Plan's original target of an average annual growth rate of 6 per cent, has been revised, taking into account a slower growth in oil exports, to 3.5 per cent. The emphasis of the Plan is on social priorities, and the central Investment Fund (FIV), which absorbs and redirects surplus oil revenue, was to spend some U.S. $19,000 million on infrastructure projects in 1982 alone. Priority is to be given to the hydroelectric complex at Guri, a coal-powered plant for Enelven, the Caracas underground railway, and a low-cost housing plan. A total of 30,000 million bolívares is to be invested in agriculture to ensure an annual production growth rate of 5.2 per cent. A further 100,000 million bolívares will be spent on the petroleum industry, mainly on offshore exploration, but also on developing petro-chemicals and industrial infrastructure.

Venezuela is a member of ALADI, the Andean Group, the IADB, SELA, the OAS and OPEC.

Transport and Communications

The length of railway track in 1981 was 268 km. There is a programme to construct 3,900 km. of track by the end of the century and a 25-km. track from Caracas to La Guaira should be completed by 1983. In 1981 there were 74,000 km. of roads, of which 22,586 km. were asphalted. A 310-km. highway links Venezuela with Brazil. The construction of an underground railway in Caracas began in 1977. The River Orinoco is navigable for about 1,120 km. and there are steamer services on Lake Maracaibo. Internal air services are well developed and international air transport is provided by three national and a number of foreign airlines.

Social Welfare

Labour legislation protects workers and there are benefits for accidents, sickness and old age. A modified insurance scheme was introduced in 1967, entitling insured workers and their dependants to medical assistance, pensions, etc. In 1978 Venezuela had 444 hospitals, with 41,386 beds, and 14,771 physicians.

Education

Primary education is free and compulsory between the ages of 7 and 13. Secondary education lasts for five years. In 1977/78 329,000 children attended nursery school, 2,309,000 primary school and 751,000 secondary school. Only 50 per cent complete their basic education and the adult illiteracy rate is 15 per cent. There are plans to introduce a basic cycle of 6 years at primary school and three years at secondary school. Experimental courses began in 1975. There are 11 universities, 32 higher education institutes and 13 private institutes.

By 1976 the Ayacucho scholarship programme, founded in 1974, had placed 11,000 students in universities and other institutes of higher education, including 6,500 students abroad. The National Training Institute (INCE) has trained some 400,000 students in a wide variety of technical subjects to help reduce the chronic shortage of skilled labour. The education budget for 1978/79 was 7,212,100 million bolívares.

Tourism

The mountain peaks and the many forests and lakes form the main tourist attractions. Venezuela has the world's highest waterfall, Angel Falls, with an overall drop of 979 metres (3,212 feet). In 1969 a state organization, CONAHOTU, was set up to promote tourism. Plans were announced in 1979 to invest 2,000 million bolívares in 100 hotels and several large-scale tourism complexes. In 1977 Venezuela received 652,423 foreign visitors (excluding excursionists). Income from tourism totalled U.S. $1,300 million in 1979.

Public Holidays

1982: May 1st (Labour Day), June 24th (Battle of Carabobo), July 5th (Independence Day), July 24th (Birth of Simon Bolívar and Battle of Lago de Maracaibo), October 12th (Discovery of America), October 24th (Maracaibo only), December 24th, 25th (Christmas), December 31st (New Year's Eve).

Exchange rates (December 1981): £1 sterling=8.26 bolívars; U.S. $1=4.29 bolívars.
100 bolívars=£12.11=$23.30.

Note: In April 1947 the exchange rate was fixed at U.S. $1=3.35 bolívars (1 bolívar=29.851 U.S. cents). This remained in effect until January 1964, except that from 1961 multiple exchange rates were in force for imports. There was also a special rate for petroleum exports ($1=3.09 bolívars). In January 1964 the currency was devalued by 25 per cent, the new principal rate being $1=4.45 bolívars. The selling rate was fixed at $1=4.50 bolívars (1 bolívar=22.222 U.S. cents), the import rate at $1=4.3085 bolívars and the petroleum export rate at $1=4.40 bolívars. These rates were in force until December 1971. From then until February 1973 the principal rate was $1=4.35 bolívars, the selling rate $1=4.40 bolívars (1 bolívar=22.727 U.S. cents), the import rate $1=4.2125 bolívars and the petroleum export rate $1=4.30 bolívars. From February 1973 to May 1976 the selling rate was $1=4.285 bolívars (1 bolívar=23.34 U.S. cents), with a special rate of $1=4.20 bolívars for exports of petroleum and iron ore. A new selling rate of $1=4.2925 bolívars was introduced in May 1976. In terms of sterling, the principal rate was £1=10.68 bolívars from November 1967 to August 1971; and £1=11.335 bolívars from December 1971 to June 1972.

THE CONSTITUTION

(January 1961)

The Federal Republic of Venezuela is divided into twenty States, one Federal District, two Federal Territories and seventy-two Federal Dependencies. The States are autonomous but must comply with the laws and constitution of the Republic.

The Legislative Power is exercised by Congress, divided into two Chambers: the Senate and the Chamber of Deputies.

Senators are elected by universal suffrage, two to represent each State, and two to represent the Federal District. There are in addition other Senators, their number being determined by law, who are selected on the principle of minority representation. Ex-Presidents of the Republic are life members of the Senate. Deputies are also elected by direct universal and secret suffrage, the number representing each State being at least two and for each Federal Territory one. A deputy must be of Venezuelan nationality and be over 21. Ordinary sessions of both Chambers begin on the second day of March of each year, and continue until the sixth day of the following July; thereafter, sessions are renewed from the first day of October to the thirtieth day of November, both dates inclusive. The Chamber of Deputies is empowered to initiate legislation. Congress also elects a Controller-General to preside over the Audit Office (Contraloría de la Nación), which investigates Treasury income and expenditure, and the finances of the autonomous institutes.

The Executive Power is vested in a President of the Republic elected by universal suffrage every five years; he may not serve two consecutive terms. The President is empowered to discharge the Constitution and the laws, to nominate or remove Ministers, to take supreme command of the Armed Forces, to direct foreign relations of the State, to declare a state of emergency and withdraw the civil guarantees laid down in the Constitution, to convene extraordinary sessions of Congress, to administer national finance and to nominate and remove Governors of the Federal District and the Federal Territories. The President also appoints an Attorney-General to act as a legal arbiter for the state.

The Judicial Power is exercised by the Supreme Court of Justice and by the Tribunals. The Supreme Court forms the highest Tribunal of the Republic and the Magistrates of the Supreme Court are elected by both Chambers in joint sessions.

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

The judicature is headed by the Supreme Court of Justice. The judges are divided into penal and civil and mercantile judges; there are military, juvenile, labour, administrative litigation, finance and agrarian tribunals. In each State there is a superior court and several secondary courts which act on civil and criminal cases.

SUPREME COURT OF JUSTICE

The Supreme Court comprises 15 judges appointed by the Congress in joint session for nine years, five of them to be appointed every three years. It is divided into three courts, each with five judges: political-administrative; civil, mercantile and labour cassation; penal cassation. When these three act together the court is in full session. It has the power to abrogate any laws, regulations or other acts of the executive or legislative branches conflicting with the Constitution. It hears accusations against members of the Government and high public officials, cases involving diplomatic representatives and certain civil actions arising between the State and individuals.

President: Dr. MARTÍN PÉREZ GUEVARA.

Attorney-General: PEDRO GÓMEZ MANTELLINI.

RELIGION

Roman Catholicism is the religion of the majority of the population, but there is complete freedom of worship.

TRANSPORT

RAILWAYS

Instituto Autónomo de Ferrocarriles del Estado (FERROGAR): Avda. Principal Los Ruices, Edif. Stemo, 1°, 2° y 3°, Apdo. 146, Caracas 1010; state company; 268 km. from Barquisimeto to Puerto Cabello; Pres. Ing. MANUEL VÁSQUEZ MOYA; Gen. Man. Ing. ROBERTO AGOSTINI C.

The Government plans to construct a 3,900-km. rail network by 1990 at a cost of 9,397 million bolívares. The basic network will comprise two north-south routes and a third running from west to east. The first north-south line, crossing the western part of the country, was due for completion in 1982.

Plans are under way for building a 50-km. underground railway in Caracas. The first stage, a 20-km. east-west rapid transit line, was begun in 1976 and it was expected to be completed by 1983 at a total cost of over 7,000 million bolívares.

G.A. Metro de Caracas: Multicentro Empresarial del Este, Edif. Miranda, Torre B, Avda. Francisco de Miranda, Caracas; f. 1976; initial cap. 600 million bolívares; to supervise the construction and use of the underground railway system; Pres. Ing. JOSÉ GONZÁLEZ LANDER.

CVG Ferrominera Orinoco G.A.: Apdo. 76.500, Caracas; state company; operates two lines Cerro Bolívar-Puerto Ordaz (179 km.) and El Pao-Palua (55 km.) for transporting iron ore.

ROADS

In 1981 there were 74,000 km. of roads, over 61,059 km. of which were all-weather roads.

Of the three great highways, the first (960 km.) runs from Caracas to Ciudad Bolívar. The second, the Pan-American Highway (1,290 km.), runs from Caracas to the Colombian frontier and is continued as far as Cúcuta. A branch runs from Valencia to Puerto Cabello. The third highway runs southwards from Coro to La Ceiba, on Lake Maracaibo.

A new Marginal Highway is under construction along the western fringe of the Amazon Basin in Venezuela, Colombia, Ecuador, Peru, Bolivia and Paraguay. The Venezuelan section now runs for over 440 km. and is fully paved.

A network of 15,000 km. of roads was planned to give better access to the interior by 1980. Only 3,125 km. of the planned roads were to be main roads or highways.

INLAND WATERWAYS

Instituto Nacional de Canalizaciones: Calle Caracas, Edif. INC, Chuao, al lado de la Torre Diamen, Apdo. E.61959, Caracas; f. 1952; semi-autonomous institution connected with the Ministry of Transport and Communications; Pres. Rear-Admiral RAFAEL CARRILLO VÁSQUEZ; Vice-Pres. FERNANDO MARTÍ O.

Compañía Anónima La Translacustre: Maracaibo; freight and passenger service serving Lake Maracaibo, principally from Maracaibo to the road terminal from Caracas at Palmarejo.

SHIPPING

There are nine major ports, 34 petroleum and mineral ports and five fishing ports. The main port for imports is La Guaira, the port for Caracas; Puerto Cabello handles raw materials for the industrial region around Valencia. Maracaibo is the chief port for the oil industry. Puerto Ordaz, on the Orinoco River, has also been developed to deal with the shipments of iron from Cerro Bolívar.

The Instituto Nacional de Puertos has designed a programme aimed at satisfying port handling requirements up to 1995, to alleviate the long-standing problem of port congestion. A new port, Carenero, is to be built at an estimated cost of U.S. $139.5 million, capable of handling 2 million tons of general freight and 300,000 tons of grain a year. Improvements and expansion of other ports, including five new docks at La Guaira, completed in 1979, have significantly raised overall capacity.

Instituto Nacional de Puertos: Calle Veracruz, cruce con Cali, Edif. Instituto Nacional de Puertos, Urb. las Mercedes, Caracas; f. 1976 as the sole port authority; Pres. Ing. CARLOS VILLARROEL; publ. Noti-Puertos.

Corpovén, S.A.: Edif. Petróleos de Venezuela, Avda. Libertador esq. con calle El Empalme, Sector La Campiña, Apdo. 14057, Candelaria, Caracas; two oil tankers; Pres. Dr. FRANK ALCOCK.

G.A. Venezolana de Navegación (GAVN): Avda. Rómulo Gallegos No. 8-07, Sector El Samán y Primera Transversal de Monte Cristo, Los Dos Caminos, Caracas; regular services to U.S. ports and Federal Republic of Germany, Netherlands, France and Spain; associated services from Scandinavian, Baltic, Mediterranean and Japanese ports; 17 cargo vessels; Pres. Rear-Adm. ANDRÉS BRITO MARTÍNEZ.

Ferries del Caribe, G.A.: f. 1972; operates ferry services (three times weekly) between Muaco and Guarano and the Netherlands Antilles; Pres. FRANCISCO LEIDENEZ; Man. Lic. ANGEL MARIO JIMÉNEZ.

Lagovén, S.A.: Edif. Lagovén, Avda. Leonardo da Vinci, Los Chaguaramos, Caracas; f. 1978 as a result of the nationalization of the petroleum industry; (formerly known as the Creole Petroleum Group); transports crude petroleum and by-products between Maracaibo, Aniba and other ports in the area; six tankers; Pres. GUILLERMO RODRÍGUEZ ERASO; Marine Man. R. G. BRAND.

A number of foreign shipping lines call at Venezuelan ports.

CIVIL AVIATION

There are two adjacent airports 13 km. from Caracas; Maiquetía for national and Simón Bolívar for international services. There are 61 commercial airports, seven of which are international airports.

NATIONAL AIRLINES

Aerovías Venezolanas S.A. (AVENSA): Esquina Platana, Edif. Banco de la Construcción y de Oriente, Apdo. 943, Caracas; f. 1943; provides extensive domestic services from Caracas; Chair. ANDRÉS BOULTON; Pres. Dr. ELÍAS LÓPEZ; fleet: 7 DC-9-30, 2 DC-9-15, 4 CV-580, 2 Boeing-727.

VIET-NAM

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Socialist Republic of Viet-Nam is in south-east Asia, bordered to the north by China, to the west by Laos and Kampuchea and to the east by the South China Sea. The climate is humid during both the hot summer and the relatively cold winter, and there are monsoon rains in both seasons. The language is Vietnamese. The principal religion is Buddhism. There are also Daoist, Confucian, Hoa Hao, Cao daist and Roman Catholic minorities. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) is red, with a large five-pointed yellow star in the centre. The capital is Hanoi.

Recent History

Cochin-China (the southernmost part of Viet-Nam) became a French colony in 1867. Annam and Tonkin (central and northern Viet-Nam) were proclaimed French protectorates in 1883. Later all three were merged with Cambodia (now Kampuchea) and Laos to form French Indochina. Throughout the French colonial period, but especially after 1920, nationalist and revolutionary groups operated in Viet-Nam. The best organized of these was the Vietnamese Revolutionary Youth League, founded by Ho Chi Minh. The League was succeeded in February 1930 by the Communist Party of Indochina, also led by Ho.

In September 1940 Japanese forces, with French cooperation, began to occupy Viet-Nam and in June 1941 the nationalists formed the Viet-Nam Doc Lap Dong Minh Hoi (Revolutionary League for the Independence of Viet-Nam), known as the Viet-Minh. In March 1945 French control was ended by a Japanese coup. Following Japan's surrender in August 1945, Viet-Minh forces entered Hanoi and on September 2nd the new regime proclaimed independence as the Democratic Republic of Viet-Nam (D.R.V.), with Ho Chi Minh as President. The Communist Party, formally dissolved in 1945, continued to be the dominant group within the Viet-Minh government. In March 1946, after French forces re-entered Viet-Nam, an agreement between France and the D.R.V. recognized Viet-Nam as a "free" state within the French Union but the D.R.V. government continued to press for complete independence. Negotiations with France broke down and full-scale hostilities began in December 1946.

In March 1949 the French established the State of Viet-Nam in the South. Meanwhile, in the North the Viet-Minh was dissolved in 1951, and the Communists formed the Dang Lao Dong Viet-Nam (Viet-Nam Workers' Party), with Ho Chi Minh as Chairman of the Central Committee. After the defeat of French forces at Dien Bien Phu in May 1954, terms for a ceasefire were settled in Geneva. Agreements signed in July 1954 provided for provisional partition of Viet-Nam into two military zones, with French forces south of latitude 17°N. and D.R.V. forces in the north. Later in 1954 the French withdrew from South Viet-Nam. Ngo Dinh Diem became Prime Minister of the State of Viet-Nam and in 1955, following a referendum, proclaimed himself President of the Republic of Viet-Nam. Diem refused to participate in the elections envisaged by the Geneva agreement. In the D.R.V. Ho Chi Minh was succeeded as Prime Minister by Pham Van Dong in 1955 but remained Head of State and Party Chairman.

The anti-communist Diem regime in the South was opposed by former members of the Viet-Minh who became known as the Viet-Cong. Diem was overthrown by a coup in November 1963 and a series of short-lived military regimes held power until June 1965, when some stability was restored by the National Leadership Committee, with Lt-Gen. Nguyen Van Thieu as Chairman and Air Vice-Marshal Nguyen Cao Ky as Prime Minister. In 1967 Gen. Thieu was elected President, with Marshal Ky as Vice-President, and in 1971, after splitting with Ky, President Thieu was re-elected unopposed.

From 1959 the D.R.V. actively assisted the insurgent movement in South Viet-Nam and it supported the establishment of the communist-dominated National Liberation Front (NLF) there in December 1960. In 1961 the U.S.A. joined the war on the side of the anti-communist regime in Saigon, later bombing the North extensively from 1965 to 1968. In November 1968 peace talks between the four participants in the Viet-Nam war began in Paris but remained deadlocked as the fighting continued. In June 1969 the NLF formed a Provisional Revolutionary Government (PRG) in the South. Ho Chi Minh died in September 1969 and was succeeded as Head of State by Ton Duc Thang, while political leadership passed to Le Duan, First Secretary of the Party since 1960.

In 1972 PRG and North Vietnamese forces launched a major offensive in South Viet-Nam and U.S. bombing of the North was renewed with greater intensity. In January 1973 a peace agreement was finally signed. It provided for a ceasefire in the South, the withdrawal of U.S. forces, the eventual peaceful reunification of the whole country, and U.S. aid to the Government in the North to assist in reconstruction. U.S. troops were withdrawn but in December 1974 combined PRG and North Vietnamese forces launched a major offensive. The Saigon army was rapidly defeated and the capital fell to PRG forces on April 30th, 1975. By May the new regime was in complete control of South Viet-Nam.

While South Viet-Nam, under the PRG, remained technically separate from the D.R.V., effective control of the whole country passed to Hanoi. In July 1976 the country's reunification was proclaimed under the name of the Socialist Republic of Viet-Nam, and Saigon renamed Ho Chi Minh City. A new Government was appointed, dominated by members of the former Government of the D.R.V. but including some members of the PRG. In December Le Duan was appointed Secretary-General of the Communist Party of Viet-Nam (formerly the Viet-Nam Workers' Party). President Ton Duc Thang died in March 1980. Nguyen Huu Tho served as acting President until July 1981, when Truong Chinh (previously Chairman of the National Assembly) was appointed President of the Council of State, a new collective leadership created by the constitution of December 1980. Real power, however, remains with Le Duan. Elections for a new National Assembly were held in April 1981. In July there were several ministerial changes, and a number of younger members with specialized knowledge were brought in to help revive the economy.

VIET-NAM

- By the end of 1976 the communist regime had established diplomatic relations with many countries, including all its South-East Asian neighbours. However, tension arose over the growing number (estimated at over 300,000) of Vietnamese refugees (particularly ethnic Chinese) arriving in these countries during 1978 and 1979. By mid-1979 the exodus had reached crisis proportions and in July an international conference was convened in Geneva to discuss the situation. The Vietnamese authorities agreed to halt the departures but by the end of the year the number of people leaving the country was again rising steadily, and by June 1981 had reached its highest level ever.

Relations with Kampuchea deteriorated markedly during 1977 and in December Viet-Nam launched a major offensive into eastern Kampuchea. Sporadic fighting continued and in December 1978 Viet-Nam invaded Kampuchea in support of elements opposed to the regime (see Kampuchea, p. 692). By January 1979 the government of Pol Pot had been overthrown and a pro-Vietnamese government was installed. The invasion prompted much international criticism, and in February 1979 Chinese forces launched a punitive attack across the border into Viet-Nam. Peace talks began in April but made little progress, and in March 1980 they were suspended by China. By early 1982 there was still no agreement on the resumption of talks. Frequent border attacks persist and the situation remains tense. Since 1980 relations with Thailand have worsened, over the issues of Khmer border refugee camps, Thailand's refugee repatriation scheme and ASEAN's nominal support for the ousted Khmer Rouge regime in Kampuchea (q.v.).

From the mid-1970s Viet-Nam moved closer to the U.S.S.R.; in June 1978 it became a member of the CMEA, and in November a treaty of friendship and co-operation with the U.S.S.R. was signed. A third signing in June 1981 increased Viet-Nam's dependence on the U.S.S.R. By early 1982 relations with the U.S.A. had still not been normalized.

Government

In 1980 the 1959 constitution of the former D.R.V. was replaced by a new constitution. Legislative power is vested in the 496-member National Assembly, elected for five years by universal adult suffrage. The Assembly elects the Council of State, as the collective presidency which is the highest organ of the National Assembly. Executive power is exercised by the Council of Ministers, responsible to the Assembly. Locally elected People's Councils operate at district, town and village level. The constitution describes the Communist Party of Viet-Nam as "the only force leading the state and society".

Defence

In July 1981 the armed forces of Viet-Nam had an estimated total strength of 1,029,000 (army 1 million, navy 4,000, air force 25,000). Paramilitary forces totalled 1.57 million. There are 50 infantry divisions and nearly 2,000 tanks. Military service is compulsory and for a minimum of two years. Following the PRG's victory in the South, the army came into possession of vast amounts of American arms and equipment, and it is now the third largest army in the world.

Economic Affairs

The economy of Viet-Nam was seriously disrupted by the war but, since the ending of hostilities in 1975, great progress has been made towards reconstruction. The two halves of the country remain economically distinct, the state-controlled system being well-established in the north, while in the south a considerable amount of private enterprise was permitted until April 1978, when a campaign against small businesses in Ho Chi Minh City was launched. In May 1978 a unified currency was introduced throughout the country, further reducing the economic differences between north and south. Collectivization of agriculture in the south has been gradually extended, and by 1979 there were about 800 agricultural co-operatives. New Economic Zones (NEZs) have been set up to increase the area under cultivation and, in conjunction with this policy, major transfers of population from the urban centres to the countryside are taking place. Between 1975 and 1980 about 1.6 million people were resettled in NEZs, and a similar number are expected to be moved south in 1980-85.

The economy, especially in the south, is predominantly agricultural. The staple crop is rice, although significant amounts of maize, sorghum, cassava, sweet potatoes, fruit, tea and coffee are also grown. Industrial crops include rubber, sugar cane, tobacco, coconuts and kenaf (a jute-like fibre). About one-third of Viet-Nam is covered by forests, and the Government is encouraging the exploitation of valuable timber resources. Considerable efforts are being made to increase agricultural output by mechanization, land reclamation, double cropping and irrigation. Production of paddy rice in 1979 was 10.7 million tons, compared with a projected 12 million tons. In 1981 a record grain crop of 15 million tons was harvested.

Most of the country's mineral resources are found in the north. Coal is the most important of these, with an estimated output of 6.2 million tons of hard coal in 1979, and a target of 6.3 million tons in 1980. Coal exports were estimated at 1.4 million tons in 1978. Other minerals include tin, copper, chromium ore and apatite (phosphate rock). In early 1979 an offshore petroleum programme began with the drilling of a well in the South China Sea, about 300 km south-east of Ho Chi Minh City. Other explorations are also in progress, with the co-operation of the U.S.S.R.

Industry is mainly concentrated in the north. Heavy U.S. bombing from 1965 to 1973 destroyed an estimated 70 per cent of productive capacity but by 1976 output in many sectors had regained pre-war levels, although the border war with China in early 1979 and the exodus of over 200,000 ethnic Chinese from the north lowered output. The principal industries are food-processing, cement, metallurgy, chemicals, paper, engineering and textiles. In 1980 the industrial sector grew by 4.7 per cent.

The 1976-80 Five-Year Plan was acknowledged to have failed. Total external debts were U.S. $3,000 million by June 1981. Growth has been restricted by the high birth rate and a series of natural disasters which have ruined successive crops. In 1981 there was a food deficit of 2.4 million tons. The third Five-Year Plan (1981-85) aims to increase agricultural production, to alleviate the acute food shortage, and hopes to achieve self-sufficiency. The development of transport and communications will also relieve the country's distribution problems.

The Vietnamese economy is heavily dependent on a large amount of foreign aid and has received support from international organizations and non-communist countries as well as its traditional sources of economic assistance, the U.S.S.R., Eastern Europe and, up to 1978, the People's Republic of China. In 1976 Viet-Nam joined the IMF and the World Bank. The IMF granted a loan of U.S. $36 million in 1981 to help the Government's economic programme. Many development projects are now in progress.

VIET-NAM

Transport and Communications

Until 1974 there was a total of only 72,945 km. of roads but, since hostilities ended, many roads have been repaired and new roads built. In 1980 there was a total of 347,243 km. of roads, including 41,200 km. of main roads. The Government has attached great importance to the restoration of the railway system and lines from Ho Chi Minh City to Loc Ninh and from Hanoi to Dong Dang are currently undergoing repair. In 1975 a long-distance bus service opened between Ho Chi Minh City and Hanoi and air services began between the two cities. Gia Lam, near Hanoi, Tan Son Nhut International (Ho Chi Minh City) and Thuo Do International are the principal airports. In 1979 it was reported that Viet-Nam's first satellite telecommunications system was under construction.

Social Welfare

The state operates a system of social security. There were 39,900 medical workers in 1980. Hospitals, dispensaries and sanatoria number nearly 2,000 (1980).

Mobile medical teams treat trachoma, malaria and other diseases. In 1977 the World Health Organization announced a U.S. $9.5 million programme to combat malaria in Viet-Nam. In July 1981 new policies were decreed, giving greater importance to child-care and educational needs. Children are to have priority in the distribution of medicines and the allocation of hospital beds.

Education

There is compulsory, free education at all levels. In 1980 there were 12.3 million pupils receiving general education. There are 81 universities and colleges throughout the country, with 16,400 teachers and an enrolment of 148,600. There are an additional 300 vocational schools, with 12,160 teachers and 131,000 students. In 1981 recommendations to improve the quality of teacher-training and to develop education more comprehensively were put forward.

THE CONSTITUTION

In December 1980 a new constitution was adopted to replace the 1959 constitution of the Democratic Republic of Viet-Nam. It consists of a preamble and 12 chapters comprising 147 articles. A summary of the main provisions follows:

General Principles: The Socialist Republic of Viet-Nam is an independent, sovereign and united country. It is a proletarian dictatorship and the people exercise state power through the National Assembly and the People's Councils.

Economic System: The economy is run on the principles of socialism, and ensures the working people's collective ownership of the means of production. The economy is directed by unified plans.

National Assembly: elected for five years by nationwide elections. It meets regularly twice a year and also in extraordinary sessions. It elects from its deputies the Chairman, Vice-Chairmen and other members of the Council of State. The Assembly also appoints the Council of Ministers, the Chief Justice of the Supreme People's Court and the Procurator-General of the Supreme People's Organ of Control. It decides, assisted by the Standing Commissions of the National Assembly, domestic and foreign policies, economic plans and, among other functions, examines and approves the budget.

Council of State: the highest body of the National Assembly and the Collective Presidency of Viet-Nam. It is concerned with the building of socialism, national defence, the implementation of laws, and all domestic and foreign affairs. Its term of office is the same as that of the National Assembly and its Chairman is concurrently Chairman of the National Defence Council.

Council of Ministers: the Government of Viet-Nam is responsible to the National Assembly, and submits draft laws, decrees and budgets to it. Its term of office corresponds with that of the National Assembly.

Local Government: the country is divided into provinces and municipalities directly under central authority, and subdivided into districts, towns and villages. These are under the authority of locally elected People's Councils.

Judicial System: consists of the Supreme People's Court the local People's Courts and the Military Tribunals. There are also local People's Organs of Control, under the Supreme People's Organ of Control, to ensure observance of law.

RELIGION

Traditional Vietnamese religion included elements of all three Chinese religions: Mahayana Buddhism, Daoism and Confucianism. Its most widespread feature was the cult of ancestors, practised in individual households and clan temples. In addition, there were (and remain) a wide variety of Buddhist sects, the sects belonging to the "new" religions of Caodaism and Hoa Hao, and a Catholic Church. The Government has stated that there is complete freedom of religious belief in Viet-Nam.

BUDDHISM

In the north a Buddhist organization, grouping Buddhists loyal to the Democratic Republic of Viet-Nam, was formed in 1954. In the south the United Buddhist Church was formed in 1964, incorporating several disparate groups, including the "militant" An-Quang group (mainly natives of central Viet-Nam), the group of Thich Tam Chau (mainly northern emigrés in Saigon) and the southern Buddhists of the Xa-Loi temple. In 1980, a Committee for the Unification of the Buddhists of Viet-Nam was formed, with TRICH TRI THU, Head of the United Buddhist Church, as President.

CAODAISM

Formally inaugurated in 1926, this is a syncretic religion based on spiritualist seances with a predominantly ethical content, but sometimes with political overtones. A number of different sects exist, of which the most politically involved (1940-75) was that of Tay-Ninh. Another sect, the Tien-Thien, has been represented in the National Liberation Front since its inception. Together the sects are said to number two million adepts. They live mostly in the south.

HOA HAO

A new manifestation of an older religion called Buu Son Ky Huong, the Hoa Hao sect was founded by Huyah Phu So in 1939, and at one time claimed 1.5 million adherents in southern Viet-Nam.

CATHOLICISM

The Vietnamese Church has existed since the 17th century, and since the 1930s has been led mainly by Vietnamese priests. Many Catholics moved from North to South Viet-Nam in 1954-55 to avoid living under Communist rule, but some remained in the north. There are about three million Catholics throughout the country.

WESTERN SAMOA

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Independent State of Western Samoa lies in central Polynesia, 2,400 km. north of New Zealand, and consists of two large and seven small islands, five of which are uninhabited. The climate is tropical, with temperatures ranging from 22° to 30°C (72°–86°F). The languages are Samoan (a Polynesian language) and English. The majority of Samoans are Christians. The flag (proportions 2 by 1) is red with a rectangular blue canton in the upper hoist displaying five white five-pointed stars in the form of the Southern Cross. The capital is Apia.

Recent History

A former German colony, Western Samoa was occupied by New Zealand forces during the 1914–18 war and in 1919 New Zealand was granted a League of Nations mandate for the islands. In 1946 Western Samoa was made a UN Trust Territory with New Zealand as the administering power. From 1954 measures of internal self-government were gradually introduced, culminating in the adoption of an independence constitution in October 1960. This was approved by a UN-supervised plebiscite in May 1961 and the islands became independent on January 1st, 1962. The office of Head of State was to be jointly held by two of the Paramount Chiefs but, upon the death of his colleague in April 1963, Malietoa Tanumafili II became sole Head of State for life.

Fiaame Mata'afa Mulinu'u, Prime Minister since 1959, lost the general election of 1970 and a new cabinet, led by Tupua Tamasese Lealofi, was formed. In 1973 Mata'afa recovered the office in a general election and held it until his death in May 1975. He was again succeeded by Tamasese who, in turn, lost the general election of March 1976 to Tupuola Taisi Efi, the first Prime Minister not of royal blood. In March 1979 the Legislative Assembly re-elected Tupuola by 24 votes to 23. The previously unorganized opposition members formed the Human Rights Protection Party in 1979.

In April–July 1981 a strike by public servants followed the Government's failure to honour in full a pay settlement agreed early in 1980. Both sides accepted the recommendations of the government-appointed commission of inquiry in July 1981.

Western Samoa joined the Commonwealth in August 1970 and the UN in December 1976.

Government

The Constitution provides for a Head of State to be elected by the Legislative Assembly for a term of five years. The present Head of State, however, holds the office for life. The Legislative Assembly is composed of 47 members; 45 of these are Samoans elected by holders of Matai titles (elected clan chiefs), of whom there are about 10,000 on the rolls, and two are elected by universal suffrage of those on the individual voters rolls (mainly Europeans). Members hold office for three years. Executive power is held by the Cabinet, comprising the Prime Minister and eight other members of the Assembly. The Prime Minister is appointed by the Head of State with the necessary approval of the Assembly.

Defence

In August 1962 Western Samoa and New Zealand signed a Treaty of Friendship, whereby the New Zealand Government, on request, acts as the sole agent of the Western Samoan Government in its dealings with other countries and international organizations.

Economic Affairs

The economy is based on agriculture, mainly at subsistence level. The principal crops are coconuts, cocoa and bananas but small amounts of coffee, timber and taro are also exported. New Zealand accounted for about 33 per cent of external trade in 1980. Australia, the U.S.A., Japan, Fiji and the Federal Republic of Germany are also important trading partners.

A number of small industrial enterprises have been established in recent years. These are principally concerned with the processing of foodstuffs but there are also plans to develop the timber industry by large-scale exploitation of forest resources on the islands of Savai'i and Upolu.

During 1975 and 1976 agricultural exports declined, leading to massive trade deficits, but by 1977 the economy was recovering, due to increased earnings from cocoa and copra, and total export earnings reached W.S. $15.8 million in 1980. The Government's 1975–79 Five-Year Development Plan aimed at strengthening the balance of payments, restraining inflation and laying the basis for improved economic growth. Western Samoa relied heavily on foreign aid for the implementation of this programme, receiving assistance from New Zealand, Australia, the UN, the EEC and the IMF.

Transport and Communications

Western Samoa has 2,042 km. of roads, nearly 200 km. being surfaced. It is well served by shipping lines and there is a daily service linking Apia with Pago Pago in American Samoa. A new deep water port was opened at Asau on Savai'i island in 1972. There is an international airport at Faleolo, about 40 km. from Apia.

Social Welfare

In 1977 there were 16 hospitals, with 674 beds, and 52 physicians.

Education

The education system is divided into primary, intermediate and secondary and is based on the New Zealand system. In 1979 there were 52,044 children attending school. About 97 per cent of the adult population are literate in Samoan.

Tourism

Western Samoa has maintained a cautious attitude towards tourism, fearing that the Samoan way of life might be disrupted by an influx of foreign visitors. The importance of income from tourism has, however, led to some development and 25,778 foreign visitors arrived in 1980. The main attractions are the scenery and climate.

Exchange rates (December 1981): £1 sterling=2.114 tala; U.S. $1=1.099 tala.

Note: The tala was introduced in July 1967, replacing the Western Samoan pound at the rate of £WS1=2 tala. This changeover coincided with a similar move in New Zealand. The Western Samoan pound had been introduced in January 1962, replacing (at par) the New Zealand pound. From October 1961 the pound was valued at U.S. $2.78 so the initial value of the tala was $1.39 ($1=71.9 sene). The market rate was fixed at 1 tala=U.S. $1.387 (U.S. $1=72.11 sene). This valuation remained in effect until August 1971. From December 1971 to February 1973 the central rate was 1 tala=$1.51 ($1=66.24 sene) and the market rate originally 1 tala=$1.478 and later 1 tala=$1.485. From February 1973 to October 1975 the central rate was 1 tala=$1.677 ($1=59.62 sene) and the market rate 1 tala=$1.649 ($1=60.66 sene). Since October 1975 the tala's direct link with the U.S. dollar has been broken and it is pegged to a "basket" of currencies (as used by New Zealand). The average value of the tala in U.S. dollars was: 1.5853 in 1975; 1.2547 in 1976; 1.2706 in 1977; 1.3586 in 1978; 1.2205 in 1979; 1.0876 in 1980. In terms of sterling, the central exchange rate between November 1967 and June 1972 was £1=1.727 tala.

THE CONSTITUTION

(adopted by a Constitutional Convention on October 28th, 1960)

HEAD OF STATE

The office of Head of State is held by His Highness Malietoa Tanumafili II, who will hold this post for life. After that the Head of State will be elected by the Legislative Assembly for a term of five years.

EXECUTIVE

Executive power lies with the Cabinet, consisting of a Prime Minister, supported by the majority in the Legislative Assembly, and eight Ministers selected by the Prime Minister. Cabinet decisions are subject to review by the Executive Council, which is made up of the Head of State and the Cabinet.

LEGISLATURE

Since the General Election of February 25th, 1967, the Legislative Assembly has consisted of 47 members, two of whom are elected from the individual voters' roll. It has a three-year term and the Speaker is elected from among the members. Samoans and non-Samoans have separate electoral rolls; two members from the individual voters' roll are elected by universal adult suffrage and the other 45 members by Matai (elected clan leaders) in 41 traditional electoral constituencies.

The plebiscite on the constitution, held in May 1961, resulted in clear acceptance of Matai suffrage.

THE YEMEN ARAB REPUBLIC

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Yemen Arab Republic is situated in the south-west corner of the Arabian peninsula, bounded to the north and east by Saudi Arabia, to the west by the Red Sea, and to the south and east by the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen. The climate in the semi-desert coastal strip is hot, with high humidity; inland, the climate is somewhat less hot, with heavy rainfall. The eastern plateau slopes into desert. The language is Arabic. The population is almost entirely Muslim, split between the Shafa'i community of the Sunni sect and the Zaidi community of the Shi'a sect. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) has three horizontal stripes of red, white and black, with a five-pointed green star in the centre. The capital is Sana'a.

Recent History

The Yemen Arab Republic (since 1967 also known as North Yemen) was formerly a kingdom. When Turkey's Ottoman Empire was dissolved in 1918 the Imam Yahya, leader of the Zaidi community, was left in control. In 1948 Yahya was assassinated in a palace coup, when power was seized by forces opposed to his feudal rule. However, Yahya's son, Ahmad, defeated the rebel forces and succeeded as Imam. During the 1950s Yemen's traditional isolation was eased and in 1958 Yemen and the United Arab Republic (Egypt and Syria) formed a federation called the United Arab States, though this was dissolved at the end of 1961.

The Imam Ahmad died in September 1962 and was succeeded by his son, Muhammad. A week later, army officers, led by Col. (later Marshal) Abdullah al-Sallal, staged a coup, declared the Imam deposed and proclaimed the Yemen Arab Republic. Civil war broke out between royalist forces, supported by Saudi Arabia, and republicans, aided by Egyptian troops. The republicans gained the upper hand and Egyptian forces withdrew in 1967. In November 1967 President Sallal was deposed while abroad and a Republican Council took power. In the same month Britain withdrew from neighbouring South Arabia, which became independent as Southern Yemen (since 1970 called the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen). The new regime then introduced repressive measures and more than 300,000 Southern Yemenis fled to North Yemen. Backed by Saudi Arabia and Libya, many of the refugees joined mercenary organizations aimed at the overthrow of the Marxist regime in Southern Yemen and carried out raids across the border.

Intermittent fighting, beginning in early 1971, flared into open warfare between the two Yemens in October 1972, with North Yemen receiving aid from Saudi Arabia and Southern Yemen being supported by Soviet arms. A ceasefire was arranged under the auspices of the Arab League, and soon afterwards both sides agreed to the union of the two Yemens within 18 months. The union was not implemented.

In June 1974 a ten-member Military Command Council, subsequently reduced in numbers, seized power under the leadership of the pro-Saudi Lt.-Col. Ibrahim al-Hamadi.

Col. Hamadi appointed Mohsin al-Aini as Prime Minister, but replaced him by Abdel-Aziz Abdel-Ghani in January 1975 in a move which seemed to reassert the influence of Saudi Arabia. During 1975 the Military Command Council was further reduced in size, and there were reports of an attempted pro-royalist coup in August. After 1975 Hamadi turned away from the U.S.S.R. and endeavoured to re-equip the army with U.S. weapons, making use of financial assistance from Saudi Arabia. In October 1977, however, Hamadi was assassinated in Sana'a. There was much speculation about who was responsible. Another member of the Military Command Council, Lt.-Col. Ahmed ibn Hussein al-Ghashmi, took over as Chairman and martial law was imposed. In February 1978 the Command Council appointed a Constituent People's Assembly and in April the Assembly elected Ghashmi President of the Republic. The Command Council was then dissolved. In June 1978 President Ghashmi was killed when a bomb in a suitcase carried by a South Yemen envoy exploded. The assassination led to a change of regime in South Yemen, and the election in July of Lt.-Col. Ali Abdullah Saleh as President of the Yemen Arab Republic. Renewed fighting broke out between North and South Yemen in February and March 1979. On March 29th, however, at a meeting in Kuwait arranged by the Arab League between the North and South Yemeni Heads of State, an agreement was signed pledging complete union of the two States. Cordial meetings have since taken place between representatives of the two countries, and the Yemen Arab Republic, after securing U.S. arms worth £160 million in March 1979, has moved closer to the U.S.S.R., concluding an arms deal with Moscow in November 1979. In a Cabinet reshuffle in October 1980, Dr. Abdul Karim al-Iryani replaced Abdel-Aziz Abdel-Ghani as Prime Minister. In December 1981 both Yemens signed a draft constitution for a unified state.

Government

Executive power is vested in the President, elected for a five-year term by the Constituent People's Assembly. He rules with the assistance of an appointed Cabinet, led by a Prime Minister. In May 1979 the Assembly was increased from 99 to 159 members, with a two-year term of office, and in May 1980 a Committee for National Consultation was formed to prepare for a General People's Congress (see Provisional Constitution, p. 1817).

Defence

In July 1981 armed forces totalled 32,100, of whom 30,000 were in the army. Defence expenditure for 1981 was 970.2 million riyals. There is a three-year period of military service.

Economic Affairs

Agriculture is the principal activity. In the highlands the land is terraced and irrigated and quite fertile. The chief crops are millet, maize, sorghum and oats. Oranges, plums, apricots, apples, bananas, quinces and lemons are grown, and dates are produced in low-lying areas. Cultivation of the narcotic qat is on the increase. Cotton was the principal export crop until 1977 but coffee is now more important, although in decline. There is a little light industry. Trade deficits are to some extent offset by remittances from Yemenis working abroad (about U.S. $1,400 million per year). These remittances have saved the economy, but the manpower drain related to them has set off other problems of land going out of cultivation. The 1982-86 Development Plan is putting most emphasis on transport and communications and agriculture.

YEMEN ARAB REPUBLIC

Introductory Survey, Statistical Survey

Transport and Communications

There are no railways in the Yemen. Roads are being developed with Chinese, American and Soviet assistance. There are highways from Hodeida to Sana'a and from Moka to Taiz and Sana'a. Hodeida port has been considerably extended with Soviet aid. A direct road runs from Taiz to Sana'a. Yemen Airways operate both internal and external services.

Social Welfare

Under the Imamate there was little provision for social welfare. The Republicans are attempting to bring about a social revolution on the lines of that achieved in Egypt. By 1977 there was one doctor for every 41,000 of the population, one dentist for every 317,000 and one pharmacist for every 216,000.

Education

Education before the revolution was in private hands, but the Government has established state-run schools, and by 1977 enrolment in primary, intermediate and general secondary schools had reached almost 250,000.

Tourism

Tourism increased in the late 1970s, and a joint tourism company was formed with South Yemen in 1980.

Public Holidays

1982: June 13th (Corrective Movement Anniversary), July 23rd-25th* (Id ul Fitr, end of Ramadan), September 26th (Revolution Day), September 29th-October 3rd* (Id ul Adha, Feast of the Sacrifice), October 14th (P.D.R.Y. National Day), October 19th* (Muslim New Year), December 28th (Moulood, Birth of the Prophet).

* Muslim religious holidays dependent on the lunar calendar, which may vary slightly from dates given.

Weights and Measures

Local weights and measures are used, and vary according to location.

Currency and Exchange Rates

100 fils = 1 Yemeni riyal.

Exchange rates (December 1981):

£1 sterling = 8.78 Yemeni riyals;

100 Yemeni riyals=£11.39=$21.92.

Note: The Yemeni riyal was introduced in 1964, with an initial value of 6s. 8d. sterling (£1=3.00 riyals) or 93.33 U.S. cents (U.S. $1=1.071 riyals). Thereafter, the authorities allowed the currency to depreciate on the free market while applying a system of multiple official exchange rates. By 1970 the free rate was $1=5.50 riyals (£1=13.20 riyals). In June 1971 multiple practices were eliminated, leaving a single rate which held fairly stable at $1=5.00 riyals until February 1973, since when the Central Bank has set a selling rate of $1=4.50 riyals. The mid-point rate was $1=4.575 riyals until April 1975, since when it has been $1=4.5625 riyals. Before 1975 the riyal was divided into 40 buqsha, rather than 100 fils. Notes of 10 and 20 buqsha have been withdrawn from circulation but coins of ½, 1 and 2 buqsha are still in use.

PROVISIONAL CONSTITUTION

(Published June 19th, 1974)

In the name of the people, the Chairman of the Command Council, having taken cognizance of Command Council Proclamation No. 1 for 1974, Command Council Proclamation No. 4 for 1974 suspending the Constitution, and Command Council Proclamation No. 5 for 1974 increasing the membership of the Command Council, and desiring to consolidate the bases of authority during the transitional period and to regulate the rights and duties of all employees in a manner conducive to fruitful production to raise the country to the level which we all hope it will attain, we announce in the name of the people that during the transitional period the country will be governed in accordance with the following rules:

Chapter One: General Principles: the State:

Article 1: Yemen is an Arab, Islamic, and independent state enjoying full sovereignty. Its system is republican. The Yemeni people are a part of the Arab nation.

Article 2: The people are the source of all authority.

Article 3: Islam is the state religion and Arabic the official state language.

Article 4: The Islamic Sharia is the source of all laws.

Article 5: Yemen is an indivisible whole and its defence is the sacred duty of all citizens.

Chapter Two: Rights and Duties:

Article 6: Yemenis have equal rights and general duties.

Article 7: Personal freedom is guaranteed in accordance with the provisions of the law.

Article 8: There shall be no crime and no penalty except as laid down by law and there shall be no penalty for acts except those committed after the promulgation of the law (applying to them).

Article 9: Homes are inviolate; it is therefore inadmissible to enter them except in such instances as prescribed by the law.

Article 10: The confiscation of funds is prohibited, except within the confines of the law.

Article 11: No person's property shall be expropriated except in the public interest, in the instances prescribed by the law, and with just compensation to the person.

Article 12: The citizens have the right to express their thoughts by means of speech, writing, or voting within the confines of the law.

Article 13: Places of worship and learning have immunity which cannot be violated except in instances required by security needs and as prescribed by the law.

Chapter Three: The System of Government:

Article 14: The Chairman of the Command Council shall assume the function of general sovereignty, particularly in taking the measures he deems necessary to protect the revolution and the republican régime.

Article 15: The Command Council shall assume the functions of the legislative and executive authorities of the state. It shall also have the power to lay down general policy and define its general framework.

Article 16: The Government is the executive and administrative body responsible for carrying out the state's general policy as laid down by the Command Council.

Article 17: The judiciary is independent, and there shall be no authority over it except for the law. Its verdicts shall be handed down and executed in accordance with the principles of the Sharia.

Chapter Four: Concluding Rules:

Article 18: All the rules determined by the laws, bylaws and decisions prior to the issuance of this constitutional declaration shall remain in force unless they conflict with the rules of this declaration or unless they are amended or revoked.

Article 19: During the transitional period action shall be taken to restore constitutional and democratic life on sound bases in view of the need to provide the Yemeni people with a dignified life and a bright future.

Article 20: This constitutional declaration shall come into force from the date of its issuance and it shall be published in the Official Gazette.

In February 1978 a 99-member Constituent People's Assembly was appointed by the Command Council to (i) propose the form of the presidency; (ii) amend the constitution, (iii) carry out various functions related to the eventual holding of parliamentary elections; (iv) review and give recommendations on the budget, domestic and foreign affairs, draft laws, etc. In April the Command Council was dissolved. In May 1979 the Constituent People's Assembly was increased to 159 members and a 15-member Consultative Council was set up. In May 1980 a 52-member Committee for National Consultation was set up to prepare for a General People's Congress. In October 1981 a government resolution called for the setting up of the Congress, and it was later announced that the Congress will comprise 1,000 people, 700 of whom will be elected.

THE PEOPLE'S DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC OF YEMEN

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The People's Democratic Republic of Yemen lies on the southern shore of the Arabian peninsula, with the Yemen Arab Republic to the north-west, Saudi Arabia to the north, and Oman to the east. The islands of Perim and Kamaran at the southern end of the Red Sea are also part of the Republic. The climate is very hot and humid in the summer, with temperatures rising to 54°C (130°F). Winters are cold in upland areas. Rainfall is very low, averaging less than 3 in. (75 mm.) a year. Arabic is spoken and most of the population are Muslims. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) has horizontal stripes of red, white and black, with a light blue triangle, containing a five-pointed red star, at the hoist. The capital is Aden.

Recent History

The People's Republic of Southern Yemen was formed on November 30th, 1967, comprising Aden and the former Protectorate of South Arabia. Aden had been under British rule since 1839 and the Protectorate was developed by a series of treaties between Britain and local leaders. Prior to British withdrawal, two rival factions fought for control, the National Liberation Front (NLF) and the Front for the Liberation of Occupied South Yemen (FLOSY). The Marxist NLF eventually won and assumed power as the National Front (NF). The country's first President, Qahtan ash-Sha'abi, was forced out of office in June 1969, when a Presidential Council, led by Salem Rubayi Ali, took power. Muhammad Ali Haitham became Prime Minister. The country's present name was adopted in November 1970. A Provisional Supreme People's Council (SPC) was established in May 1971 as the national legislature. In August 1971 Haitham was replaced as Prime Minister by Ali Nasser Muhammad.

Following independence, more than 300,000 Southern Yemenis fled to the Yemen Arab Republic (North Yemen) when the NF started rounding up dissident elements. A polarization of interests by then existed, with North Yemen establishing closer ties with the West and receiving aid from Saudi Arabia and Libya, while the extreme left-wing regime in Southern Yemen began receiving aid from the People's Republic of China and the U.S.S.R. There were clashes with Saudi Arabia in 1969 and intermittent fighting with North Yemeni mercenaries on the border between the two Yemens in 1971. This erupted into open war in October 1972 but at a meeting in Cairo later in the month both sides proposed a union of the two Yemens, and a draft agreement to this effect was signed but never implemented. In October 1975 the ruling NF merged with two smaller parties to form the United Political Organization—National Front (UPO-NF).

The proposed union of the two Yemens seemed to have been rendered impossible when President Ahmed ibn Hussein al-Ghashmi of North Yemen was assassinated in June 1978 by a bomb carried in the suitcase of a South Yemen envoy. In the subsequent wave of recriminations

President Rubayi Ali of South Yemen was deposed and executed by opponents within the UPO-NF. The Prime Minister, Ali Nasser Muhammad, became interim Head of State. Two days after the overthrow of Rubayi Ali it was announced that the three parties within the UPO-NF had agreed to form a Marxist-Leninist "vanguard" party. The constituent congress of the new Yemen Socialist Party (YSP) was held in October, when Abdul Fattah Ismail became Secretary-General. A new SPC was elected in December and appointed Ismail to be Head of State. In April 1980 the Prime Minister, Ali Nasser Muhammad, replaced Ismail as Head of State, Chairman of the Presidium of the SPC and Secretary-General of the YSP. Ali Nasser Muhammad's position was consolidated in October 1980, when his posts were confirmed at an Extraordinary Congress of the YSP. A reshuffle of the Council of Ministers followed.

Friction between North and South Yemen following the assassination of President al-Ghashmi had built up to large-scale fighting by February and March 1979, and it was therefore a surprise when an agreement was signed in Kuwait on March 29th between the two Heads of State pledging complete union of the two States. Meetings between representatives of the two countries produced few apparent results until December 1981, when both sides signed a draft constitution for a unified state. Tension in the whole Gulf and southern Arabian region was increased in October 1979, when South Yemen signed a 20-year Treaty of Friendship and Co-operation with the U.S.S.R., which empowers the U.S.S.R. to station up to 18,000 troops in South Yemen.

Government

Under the 1970 Constitution, legislative power is vested in the unicameral Supreme People's Council (SPC), comprising 111 elected members. The SPC appoints a Presidium, whose Chairman is Head of State, and also appoints the Council of Ministers. The Yemen Socialist Party is the only legal political party. The country is divided into six Governorates comprising 28 provinces.

Defence

In July 1981 armed forces totalled 24,300 men: 22,000 in the army, 1,300 in the air force and 1,000 in the navy. The army was expected to rise to about 40,000 men by 1982. Defence expenditure in 1980 was 43.9 million dinars.

Economic Affairs

Before independence the economy of the area had depended to a considerable extent on revenues from Aden, an important free port which also benefited from the British forces' expenditure. The political troubles brought about a decline in tourism, and the closure of the Suez Canal greatly reduced shipping traffic generally. The major oil refinery in Aden also suffered initially, but later recovered owing to demand from Egypt following the destruction of the Suez refinery. The economy has otherwise declined since independence, but the re-opening of the Suez Canal in June 1975 and an improvement scheme for the Port of Aden are having beneficial effects. An $80 million extension to the Port of Aden was expected to go ahead in 1982. British aid ceased in summer 1968, but aid from several Communist and Arab countries has supported the economy. In recent years, remittances from emigrant workers have helped to stimulate business. All important foreign business enterprises except the B.P. refinery were nationalized in November 1969, and the B.P. refinery was nationalized in the spring of 1977. The hinterland depends on subsistence agriculture and fishing; the rich fishing grounds are being exploited under the Five-Year Plans. Some cotton is grown and coffee, tea, cocoa and spices are also important exports. The 1980-85 Five-Year Plan envisages expenditure of YD 425 million, about a quarter of which has been allocated to electricity and water projects.

Transport and Communications

Before the Suez Canal was closed in 1967 Aden was the principal port of call between Europe and the Persian Gulf, India and the Far East. It was hoped that, with the re-opening of the canal in June 1975, Aden would regain that position, but recovery has been slow. In 1977 the port handled about 30 per cent of the net registered tonnage of 1966, the year before the closure of the Suez Canal. There are also good international air services. Few roads exist inland, but a new road has been built, with massive Chinese aid, between Aden and Mukalla.

Social Welfare

In 1976 there were 44 hospitals, with 2,652 beds, and 190 physicians. Emphasis has been given to developing local health centres.

Education

In 1974 there were 1,036 primary, 105 intermediate and 19 secondary schools. All state fees for education were abolished in December 1974. It is estimated that between 1970 and 1975 the proportion of children aged 6 to 11 years receiving primary education rose from 61 to 78 per cent. About 19 per cent of children aged 12 to 17 attended secondary schools in 1975.

Tourism

Tourism has been allocated YD 20 million under the 1981-85 Plan, and a joint tourism company has been set up with North Yemen.

Public Holidays

1982: May 21st* (Leilat al Meiraj, Ascension of the Prophet), July 23rd* (Id ul Fitr, end of Ramadan), September 29th* (Id ul Adha, Feast of the Sacrifice), October 14th (National Day), October 19th* (Muslim New Year), October 28th* (Ashoura), December 28th* (Moulood, Birth of the Prophet).

*Muslim holidays, dependent on the lunar calendar, which may vary slightly from the dates given.

Weights and Measures

The imperial system is generally used in Aden, while the rest of the country still uses local weights and measures.

Currency and Exchange Rates

1,000 fils = 1 Yemeni dinar (YD).

Exchange rates (December 1981):

£1 sterling = 664.4 fils;

U.S. $1 = 345.4 fils.

FINANCE

1,000 fils = 1 Yemeni dinar (YD).

Coins: 1, 2½, 5, 25 and 50 fils.

Notes: 250 and 500 fils; 1, 5 and 10 dinars.

Exchange rates (December 1981): £1 sterling = 664.4 fils; U.S. $1 = 345.4 fils.

100 Yemeni dinars = £150.52 = $289.52.

Note: Before independence (November 30th, 1967) the currency unit was the South Arabian dinar (SA dinar), introduced in April 1965 with a value of £1 sterling, then worth U.S. $2.80. On November 18th, 1967, the pound and dinar were both devalued to $2.40 ($1 = 416.67 fils). Following independence the SA dinar was replaced by the Southern Yemen dinar (called the Yemeni dinar since 1971), with the same value. The exchange rate (1 dinar = $2.40) remained in force until August 1971. Between December 1971 and February 1973 the rate was 1 dinar = $2.6057 ($1 = 383.77 fils). The present dollar valuation has been effective since February 1973. The dinar was at par with the pound sterling until the latter was allowed to "float" in June 1972.

THE CONSTITUTION

Before the 1970 constitution was drawn up existing ordinances and regulations remained in force, with Presidential authority replacing the powers of the British and Federal Governments. The National Front general command, which had 41 members, formed the interim legislative authority. The country is divided into eight (later six) administrative Governorates. The two-year term of office granted to the National Front expired on November 30th, 1969, and was formally renewed for another year. Following the adoption of the new constitution on November 30th, 1970, a Provisional Supreme People's Council of 101 selected members took over legislative powers. Amendments to the Constitution allowing for the formation of the Yemen Socialist Party were approved by the Supreme People's Council in October 1978. General elections took place in December 1978 for a 111-member Council which subsequently elected a Presidium, whose Chairman became Head of State. In March 1979 a constitutional commission from both the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen and the Yemen Arab Republic was appointed to draw up a Constitution for a unified state.

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of Zaire lies in central Africa, bordered by the Congo to the north-west, by the Central African Republic and Sudan to the north, by Uganda, Rwanda, Burundi and Tanzania to the east and by Zambia and Angola to the south. There is a short coastline at the outlet of the River Zaire (Congo). The climate is tropical, with an average temperature of 27°C (80°F) and an annual rainfall of 150 to 200 cm. French is the official language. Over 400 Sudanese and Bantu dialects are spoken, Kiswahili, Kiluba, Kikongo and Lingala being the most widespread. African religions are based on traditional beliefs. About 48 per cent of the population are nominally Catholic, and 13 per cent nominally Protestant. The flag is green with a central yellow disc in which a black hand holds a torch with a red flame. The capital is Kinshasa (formerly Léopoldville).

Recent History

Zaire, formerly called the Belgian Congo, became independent from Belgium as the Republic of the Congo on June 30th, 1960. Five days later the armed forces mutinied. Belgian actions during the disorder that followed and its support for the secession of Katanga (now Shaba) province were condemned in the UN, and UN troops were sent to the Congo to maintain order. Disagreements between the Congo's Head of State, Joseph Kasavubu, and the Prime Minister, Patrice Lumumba, over the issues of Katangan secession and the intervention of UN troops led to the dismissal of Lumumba in September. The Government was taken over temporarily by Col. (later Gen.) Joseph-Désiré Mobutu. Lumumba was imprisoned in December but his supporters set up a rival government in Stanleyville (Kisangani) which controlled Orientale, Kivu and northern parts of Kasai and Katanga. Mobutu returned power to President Kasavubu in February 1961 but a few days later the murder of Lumumba was announced. The strong reactions to this in Africa and the UN led to negotiations between Kasavubu and the followers of Lumumba which eventually produced a new government, with Cyrille Adoula as Prime Minister, in August. Katangan secession ended only in January 1963 with the Katanga leader Moïse Tshombe going into exile. The Katangan rebel gendarmes who followed him formed the Congolese National Liberation Front (FNLC) in 1963 and later served with the Marxist Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola (MPLA).

During 1962 the Lumumbists left the government, which later assumed full powers, closing parliament, and arresting opposition elements. Early in 1964 revolt flared up in Kwilu under Pierre Mulele. In July Kasavubu appointed Tshombe as an interim Prime Minister pending elections, and in August the country was renamed the Democratic Republic of the Congo. Early in 1965 the revolt crumbled. The struggle between Tshombe and Kasavubu for the new post of President brought about the seizure of power by the army under Mobutu, at the head of the "Second Republic," on November 24th, 1965. The new regime was quickly approved by Parliament but in 1966 and 1967 there were two further revolts, by pro-

Tshombe mercenaries and Katangan soldiers. In June 1967 a new constitution, approved by referendum, was adopted. In September 1968 Mulele returned to Kinshasa from Brazzaville after being promised a pardon but was tried secretly and executed. In 1970 Gen. Mobutu was elected President (unopposed) and took office for a seven-year term. In January 1972 he became known as Mobutu Sese Seko.

In October 1971 the Democratic Republic of the Congo became the Republic of Zaire, and a year later the Government of Zaire and the Executive Committee of the Mouvement populaire de la Révolution (MPR), Zaire's sole legal political party, merged into the National Executive Council.

Zaire was involved for a number of years with the struggle for independence in Angola and intensified its support for the FNLA (National Front for the Liberation of Angola) in 1975. However, following the victory of the MPLA in early 1976, Zaire broke off relations with the FNLA and acknowledged the new regime.

In March 1977 the FNLC, led by Lt.-Gen. Nathaniel Mbumba, invaded Zaire from Angola in an attempt to depose Mobutu. By May the Zairian army, supported by foreign troops and aid, had forced the invaders to retreat. Mobutu responded with reforms which included the establishment in July of a new government, with Dr. Mpinga Kasenda in the newly-created office of First State Commissioner, and the holding of direct elections, under a new electoral code, in October. In December 1977 President Mobutu was re-elected for a further seven-year term and a new Executive Council was announced.

In May 1978 a second invasion by the FNLC reached Kolwezi, a strategic town in the mining region of Shaba. With Western support, Mobutu survived the resultant crisis. An Inter-African Force, composed mainly of Moroccan and Senegalese troops, restored order in Shaba. Following the resumption of diplomatic relations with Angola in July, meetings between Mobutu and President Neto of Angola in August and October produced agreement not to support rebels against each other, and a commitment to open the Benguela railway, which formerly transported Zaire's copper exports through Angola to the sea. Following criticism of the National Executive Council by the Legislative Council, Mobutu appointed a new government in March 1979, with Bo-Boliko Lokonga, former head of the Legislative Council, as First State Commissioner.

The Inter-African Force left Shaba in July and August 1979. Belgian, Chinese, Egyptian and French instructors had been training Zairian troops during 1979 into a disciplined army which it was hoped would encourage the return of the European specialist engineers needed to restart the mines, which had fallen into disrepair during and since the uprisings. In June President Mobutu also transferred the Government temporarily to Lubumbashi, in Shaba, in another confidence-boosting move. In January 1980, as part of a massive anti-corruption drive, Mobutu completely reorganized the National Executive Council, dismissing 13 of the 22 Commissioners, and reorganized the judicial system under a Ministry of Justice.

In a series of political reforms in August 1980, the number of institutions of the MPR was increased from five to eight. The new post of Chairman, to be held by the President of the MPR, became the central organ of decision-making and control of the Party's activities. In September President Mobutu appointed a 114-member Central Committee to become the MPR's most important organ after the Congress, thus signifying a transfer of prerogatives from the Politbureau. The MPR's Executive Committee became the Executive Secretariat and, in a ministerial reshuffle, the outgoing First State Commissioner, Bo-Boliko Lokonga, was appointed Executive Secretary. A draft bill for amending the Constitution to accommodate these changes was passed in November. The bill also further confirmed concentration of power in the hands of the President of the MPR, i.e. the President of the Republic.

In February 1981 a further ministerial reshuffle took place, and in April the First State Commissioner, Nguza Karl-I-Bond, went into self-imposed exile on a trip to Belgium. He was replaced by N'Singa Udjuu Ongwakebi Untube, who also became Executive Secretary of the MPR when the posts were merged in October 1981 during a series of political changes, which included a major ministerial reshuffle and the decision to elect the Party's Politbureau from the Central Committee. Meanwhile, the strong criticism of Mobutu's regime by the exiled Nguza caused a severe strain on relations between Zaire and Belgium until the Belgian authorities gave an assurance in July that the criticism would be moderated.

Government

Under the Constitution promulgated in February 1978, legislative power is held by the unicameral National Legislative Council, with 268 members elected for five years by universal adult suffrage. Since 1970 the only authorized political party is the ruling MPR. Executive power is vested in the President, directly elected for seven years. He appoints and leads the National Executive Council, a cabinet of State Commissioners with departmental responsibilities. The MPR's highest policy-making body is to be the 114-member Central Committee (see above). The Political Bureau has 38 members, elected by the Central Committee. The President is advised on questions of security by a National Security Council formed in March 1979. Zaire comprises eight Regions, each headed by an appointed Commissioner, and the capital city of Kinshasa, under a Governor.

Defence

Military service is compulsory. In July 1981 armed forces totalled 22,100, of whom 18,500 were in the army, 2,100 in the air force and 1,500 in the navy. There is also a paramilitary force, comprising the National Guard and the Gendarmerie, of about 35,000. Defence expenditure for 1979 totalled 92 million zaires.

Economic Affairs

Potentially one of Africa's richest states, Zaire has extensive agricultural, mineral and energy resources. The country's chief riches lie in the Shaba copper mines and in extensive deposits of cobalt, of which Zaire has 65 per cent of the world's reserves. Manganese, zinc, uranium and other metals are also mined. The rich diamond deposits in Kasai make Zaire the world's largest producer. In 1981 the marketing monopoly for Zaire's diamonds was taken over by the state-controlled Sozacom after 14 years of selling through the Central Selling Organisation, controlled by De Beers of South Africa. It is also planned to establish a large diamond-cutting industry in Zaire. Although mineral products account for an average of about 75 per cent of export earnings, the contribution of mining and metallurgy to G.D.P. fell from over 22 per cent in 1973 and 1974 to only 8.8 per cent in 1977 as a result of the drastic fall in the world market price for copper after 1974.

With refineries at Matadi and Moanda, extensive offshore petroleum reserves have been exploited since 1975, and transportation will be facilitated by the new deep-water port planned for Banana.

Zaire has vast hydroelectric potential, with thermal power accounting for only 1 per cent of installed capacity. A large-scale aluminium smelter is to be built to exploit the output of the Inga hydroelectric complex near Kinshasa.

Principal agricultural products are coffee, palm oil and kernels, and rubber, which are the prime agricultural exports, and timber, cassava and bananas. Agriculture employs over 70 per cent of the working population but only about 3 per cent of the land area is used for agriculture. Agricultural production has declined every year since 1970, partly because of the high level of inflation and the collapse of the road system, which has meant that farmers are unable to get their produce to town markets and have consequently abandoned plantations as uneconomic. A Ministry of Rural Development was created in 1977 to boost agricultural production, but in 1979 food accounted for 18 per cent of imports by value.

Following nationalization in the mid-1960s of the country's mining interests, a policy of "Zairization" was adopted in 1973, under which most foreign companies were nationalized. Since 1976, however, President Mobutu has offered to restore 100 per cent of many holdings to their former owners.

In 1976 the Economic Community of the Great Lakes Countries (CEPGL) was established by Zaire, Burundi and Rwanda, all of whom were signatories in 1974 to the Lomé Convention. The EEC remains the chief trading partner, with Belgium-Luxembourg taking 17 per cent of exports and providing 15 per cent of imports in 1978.

G.N.P. declined by 4 per cent annually from 1975 to 1979 and industrial production, especially in minerals, fell in 1978 and 1979 due to the lack of spare parts needed to repair damage caused in the two Shaba wars; exports have been hindered by terrorist attacks on land routes through Angola and Rhodesia (now Zimbabwe) and, more recently, by the closure of the border with Sudan in 1981. Industry was working well below installed capacity, often by 30 per cent or more, and there were reports in 1980 of plants working at only one-third capacity.

Inflation and the deep-rooted corruption of the Government have caused Zaire difficulty with its balance of payments and servicing of foreign debts. Coffee, gold, diamonds and ivory were still being smuggled out of the country on a massive scale in 1981, and fraud and the inadequacy of customs control had reached such proportions that the Government declared in 1979 that the import figures no longer reflected reality.

Despite foreign aid and the intervention of the IMF, the country's total external debt in November 1981 was estimated at almost $5,000 million. Attempts to revive the economy are based on a three-year credit facility, arranged with the IMF in June 1981, for $1,200 million, and on an agreement with a group of 11 countries, under the chairmanship of the World Bank, for the rescheduling of external government debt repayments of between $300 million and $400 million, due in 1981 and 1982. When the 11 countries (the so-called "Paris Club") had first met in 1978 to discuss aid for Zaire, $225 million was pledged and in April 1980 the Paris Club agreed to reschedule $1,300 million of Zaire's Government-guaranteed debt; $434 million worth of debt was renegotiated with commercial banks. Successive devaluations of the zaire (the last was by 40 per cent in June 1981), a stringent credit squeeze and a reduction of currency in circulation have also been employed to aid the economy, but falling prices for copper and cobalt, Zaire's main exports, are expected to hinder any substantial reduction of the deficits. None the less, the budget deficit fell from 1,800 million zaires in 1980 to about 1,000 million zaires in 1981, and inflation, which had been 125 per cent in 1978, was under 50 per cent in 1980. G.D.P. increased in 1980, for the first time in many years, by 1.8 per cent.

Transport and Communications

Transport flows for the most part along the River Zaire and its tributaries, Zairian rivers being navigable above the Inga rapids for 13,700 km. The chief ports are Matadi, which is the highest point on the Zaire accessible from the sea, and Boma. Studies for a deep-water port at Banana, on the Atlantic coast, were completed in 1981 and construction began on a road-rail suspension bridge over the Zaire at Matadi in 1979. This is the first stage of a railway construction programme to link the CFMK Kinshasa-Matadi line to the future Matadi-Banana line, thus providing the only direct land route between Mayumbe and the rest of the country. In 1980 railways totalled 5,254 km., of which 858 km. were electrified. Most roads are in poor condition owing to inadequate maintenance. In 1980 they totalled about 145,000 km., of which 20,683 km. were main or national roads. There are four international airports—at Ndjili (for Kinshasa), at Luano (for Lubumbashi), at Bukavu and at Kisangani. By June 1979 four earth satellite stations had been installed (at Kinshasa, Lubumbashi, Kisangani and G'badolite) as part of the plan to build 13 earth stations and 17 television stations.

Social Welfare

There is an Institut National de la Sécurité Sociale guaranteeing insurance coverage for sickness, pensions and family allowances under an obligatory scheme of national insurance. In 1979 Zaire had 77,000 hospital beds and 1,648 doctors.

Education

There are primary, secondary, technical and agricultural schools. In 1978 there were 5,200,000 pupils in primary education, 680,000 in secondary, and 35,000 in higher. In 1974 a one-year period of compulsory civic service, including military, political and agricultural training, was introduced for all school-leavers. Since then, all religious education has been abolished. It is estimated that about 70 per cent of children aged 6 to 11 years attended primary schools in 1978. In 1975 11 per cent of those aged 12 to 17 received secondary education. There is one university with three campuses.

Tourism

Zaire has extensive lake and mountain scenery. Tourism expanded steadily under a plan announced in 1968, but there was a sharp drop in the numbers of visitors from 93,682 in 1974 to only 18,942 in 1976, although arrivals rose to 25,600 in 1978.

Public Holidays

1982: May 1st (Labour Day), May 20th (Anniversary of the Mouvement populaire de la Révolution), June 24th (Anniversary of Zaire currency, Promulgation of the 1967 Constitution and Day of the Fishermen), June 30th (Independence Day), August 1st (Parents' Day), October 14th (Youth Day, birthday of President Mobutu), October 27th (Anniversary of the country's change of name to Zaire), November 17th (Army Day), November 24th (Anniversary of the Second Republic), December 25th (Christmas Day).

1983: January 1st (New Year's Day), January 4th (Commemoration of the Martyrs of Independence).

Weights and Measures

The metric system is in force.

FINANCE

10,000 sengi=100 makuta (singular, likuta)=1 zaire.

Coins: 10 sengi; 1 likuta, 5 makuta.

Notes: 10, 20 and 50 makuta; 1, 5 and 10 zaires.

Exchange rates (December 1981): £1 sterling=10.46 zaires; U.S. $1=5.44 zaires.
100 zaires=£9.56=§18.39.

Note: The zaire was introduced in June 1967, replacing the Congolese franc (CF) at the rate of 1 zaire=1,000 francs. At the same time the currency was devalued by 70 per cent, the old exchange rate of U.S. $1=150 francs (at which the buying and selling rates were unified in January 1964) being replaced by a new rate of 1 zaire=U.S. $2.00 ($1=50 makuta). This valuation remained in force until March 1976. When the U.S. dollar, previously at par with the IMF Special Drawing Right (SDR), was devalued in December 1971 the zaire's value fell to 1.8421 SDRs (1 SDR=0.5429 zaire). In February 1973 the dollar was again devalued and the zaire's value was fixed at 1.6579 SDRs (1 SDR=0.6032 zaire). From July 1974 the fixed relationship between the SDR and the U.S. dollar was ended but the zaire remained tied to U.S. currency. In March 1976 the link between the zaire and the U.S. dollar was ended and the zaire's value was pegged to the SDR (based on a weighted "basket" of currencies) at a mid-point of parity (1 zaire=1 SDR), representing a depreciation of 42.1 per cent. This valuation remained in effect until November 1978, when the zaire was devalued by 10 per cent to 0.90 SDR. Other devaluations followed until in January 1979 the exchange rate was fixed at 1 zaire=0.50 SDR. The zaire was further devalued to 0.375 SDR in August 1979, to 0.2625 SDR in February 1980 and to 0.1575 SDR in June 1981. The average-exchange rate (zares per U.S. dollar) was 0.807 in 1976; 0.857 in 1977; 0.836 in 1978; 1.729 in 1979; 2.800 in 1980. In terms of sterling, the zaire was valued at 16s. 8d. or 83.33p (£1=1.20 zaires) from November 1967 to August 1971; and at 76.75p (£1=1.3029 zaires) from December 1971 to June 1972.

THE CONSTITUTION

The following constitution was promulgated on February 15th, 1978, to replace the constitution adopted by national referendum in June 1967.

The Republic of Zaire is defined as a united, democratic, secular and social state, composed of eight administrative regions and the city of Kinshasa.

HEAD OF STATE

The President of the Republic is elected for a seven-year term, renewable once only. The Presidency of the Republic follows automatically election to the Leadership of the Mouvement Populaire de la Révolution (MPR), the sole political party, and approval of this choice by the electorate. Candidates must be natives of Zaire and aged over 40. Under the revised Constitution, the Head of State is also the Head of the National Executive Council and of the National Legislative Council and acts as the chief executive, controls foreign policy and the judiciary, and is Commander-in-Chief of the armed forces and the gendarmérie.

EXECUTIVE POWER

The programme and decisions of the National Executive Council are determined by the President and carried out by the State Commissioners who are heads of their departments. The National Executive Council is dissolved at the end of each Presidential term, though it continues to function until a new National Executive Council is formed. The members of the National Executive Council are appointed or dismissed by the President.

LEGISLATURE

Parliament consists of a single Chamber, the National Legislative Council, its 268 members are designated People's Commissioners, and are elected for five years by direct, universal suffrage with a secret ballot. Candidates must be natives of Zaire and aged over 25. The Bureau of the National Legislative Council is elected for the duration of the legislature, and consists of the President, two Vice-Presidents and two Secretaries. The members of the National Executive Council have the right and, if required, the obligation to attend the meetings of the National Legislative Council. It meets twice yearly, from April to July and from October to January.

POLITICAL PARTIES

In May 1967 it was resolved that the MPR should be Zaire's only party. The Political Bureau* of the MPR, in its function of nominating and electing the Head of State, is, in effect, the supreme organ of state. It consists of thirty-eight members elected from the party's Central Committee. Candidates must be natives of Zaire and aged over 35.

REGIONAL GOVERNMENTS

The regional commissioners of the eight regions are appointed and dismissed by the President.

JUDICIARY

The Judicial Council†, one of the organs of the MPR, consists of the Supreme Court, the General Council of War, the Court of State Security, the Tribunals and the Council of War. The President appoints a magistrate to preside over the Judicial Council.

FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS AND DUTIES

All citizens are equal before the law, irrespective of social class, religion, tribe, sex, birth or residence. All citizens are members of the MPR, have the duty to uphold the revolution and have the right to vote at the age of 18. Every person shall enjoy the rights of personal respect, protection of life and inviolability of person. No person may be arrested, detained, executed or subjected to torture or inhuman or degrading treatment except within the prescribed form of the law. All citizens are entitled to freedom of expression, conscience and religion. Military service is compulsory but may be replaced by community service. All natives of Zaire have the right and duty to work, and can defend their rights by trade union action. The right to strike is recognized and is exercised according to laws.

* According to a draft bill to amend the Constitution passed in November 1980, power stemming from the people is exercised by the President of the MPR, the President of the Republic, by other institutions of the MPR, or by referendum. The number of institutions of the MPR increases from five to eight with the creation of the post of Chairman of the MPR (the Chairman is the central institution of the MPR for decision-making) and the establishment of a Central Committee (which takes precedence over the Political Bureau) and an Executive Committee.

† In January 1980 a Justice Department was set up to replace the Judicial Council (see Judicial System, p. 1845).

Union Nationale des Travailleurs du Zaïre (UNTZA): B.P. 8814, Kinshasa; f. 1967 as the sole syndical organization; branches in all the regions; Gen. Sec. LUZOBO; publs. Notre Droit, Formation.

TRADE FAIR

FIKIN—Foire Internationale de Kinshasa (Kinshasa International Trade Fair): B.P. 1397, Kinshasa; f. 1968; state-owned; held annually in July; Pres. Délégué Gén. TOGBA MATA BOBOY.

TRANSPORT

RAILWAYS

Total length of railways in 1980 (Jan. 1st): 5,254 km., including 858 km. of electrified rail. The main line runs from Lubumbashi to Ilebo. An extension to Kinshasa is under construction which will join the link to Matadi. In December 1974 the companies of KDL, CFL, CFMK, CFM, and CVZ were amalgamated to form Zaire National Railways, SNCZ. ONATRA remained autonomous, under its own Director-General. International connections run to Dar es Salaam (Tanzania) and Lobito (Angola), and also connect with the Zambian, Zimbabwean, Mozambican and South African systems.

Société Nationale des Chemins de Fer Zaïrois (SNCZ): P.O.B. 297, Lubumbashi (Shaba); and B.P. 10,597, Kinshasa; f. 1974; administers all internal sections, except river transport operated by ONATRA; Pres. and Dir.-Gen. GEORGE GUNST; Gen. Man. ROBERT BAUDOUR; Admin. Dir. KASONGO NYAMVIETAMBU; publ. Njanja (monthly).

ROADS

In 1980 there were approximately 145,000 km. of roads, of which 20,683 km. were main roads. In 1974 there were 157,437 vehicles. In general road conditions are poor, owing to inadequate maintenance.

INLAND WATERWAYS

For over 1,600 km. the River Zaire (Congo) is navigable. Above the Stanley Falls the Zaire changes its name to Lualaba, and is used for shipping on a 965-km. stretch from Bubundu to Kindu and Kongolo to Bukama. (There is a railway from Matadi, the principal port on the lower Zaire, to Kinshasa.) The total length of inland waterways is 13,700 km.

Soc. Zaïroise des Chemins de Fer des Grands Lacs: River Lualaba services, Bubundu-Kindu and Kongolo-Malemba N'kula; Lake Tanganyika services, Kamina-Kigoma-Kalundu-Moba-Mpulungu.

Zaire Network: services on the Luapula and Lake Mweru.

East African Railways and Harbours: services on Lake Mobutu Sese Seko.

Office National des Transports au Zaïre (ONATRA): 177 Blvd. du 30 juin, B.P. 98, Kinshasa 1; Regd. Office B.P. 16,691, Kinshasa 1; operates 12,174 km. of waterways, 502 km. of railways and road transport; controls ports of Kinshasa, Matadi, Boma and Banana; Gen. Man. M. L. IKORO.

SHIPPING

The principal seaports are Matadi, Boma and Banana on the lower Zaire. Matadi is linked by rail with Kinshasa. Much of the mineral trade is shipped from Lobito in Angola, however, and does not pass through Zaire's ports.

Compagnie Maritime Zaïroise S.A.R.L.: Bldg. CMZ (AMIZA), B.P. 9496, Kinshasa; f. 1967; member of UK/West Africa Lines (UKWAL) since January 1978; services to Antwerp, North Continental Range to east Africa, U.S.A., Mediterranean ports to west Africa, Japan, Hong Kong and Singapore; fleet of 3 vessels of 12,000 d.w.t. and 7 vessels of 15,000 d.w.t.; Chair. KEM-BUKUSWA NE NLAZA; Man. Dir. ABO TE ODOKO DUMBE.

ONATRA: (see above).

Régie des voies fluviales: Ave. Lumpungu 109, Kinshasa/Gombe, B.P. 11697, Kinshasa 1; administers rivers; Gen. Man. MONDOMBO SISA EBAMBE.

Compagnie Maritime Belge runs a fortnightly passenger and cargo service from Antwerp to Matadi, and cargo liner services are also operated by Elder Dempster Lines and Palm Line.

CIVIL AVIATION

There are international airports at Ndjili (for Kinshasa), at Luano (for Lubumbashi), at Bukavu and at Kisangani. There is also an internal air service. An airport at Isiro and another built under French direction at Rutshuru in the Kivu region were under construction in 1978.

Air Zaire, S.A.R.L.: 4 ave. du Port, Kinshasa, B.P. 8552, Kinshasa; f. 1961; domestic services and international services to Angola, Benin, Burundi, Cameroon, the Central African Republic, Gabon, Guinea, the Ivory Coast, Kenya, Nigeria, Senegal, Tanzania, Togo, Uganda, Zambia, Belgium, France, Greece, Italy, Portugal and the United Kingdom; Pres. and Chief Exec. GEYORO TE KULE; fleet of 2 DC-8, 2 DC-10, 3 F-27, 3 Boeing 737.

Zaïre Aéro Service, s.p.r.l.: Ave. des Batétéla 4, B.P. 1445, Kinshasa; f. 1975; operates from Ndolo airport; services throughout Zaire and to Africa and Western Europe; fleet of 2 Fokker F27, 5 DC-4, 5 Viscount 700.

FOREIGN AIRLINES

Aeroflot (U.S.S.R.), Air Afrique (Ivory Coast), Alitalia, British Airways, Ethiopian Airlines, Iberia (Spain), KLM (Netherlands), Lufthansa (Federal Republic of Germany), Sabena (Belgium), Swissair, TAP (Portugal), and UTA (France) provide services to Kinshasa.

TOURISM AND CULTURE

Office National du Tourisme: blvd. du 30 juin, Building de la Rwindi, B.P. 9502, Kinshasa 1; f. 1959; Man. Dir. (vacant).

Regional branches at Bukavu, Goma and Kisangani; office in Brussels.

CULTURAL ORGANIZATION

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of Zambia is a land-locked state in southern central Africa, bordered to the north by Tanzania and Zaire, to the east by Malawi and Mozambique, to the south by Zimbabwe, Botswana and Namibia, and to the west by Angola. The climate is tropical, modified by altitude with average temperatures from 18° to 24°C (65°-75°F). The official language is English. The principal African languages are Nyanja, Bemba, Tonga, Lozi, Lunda and Luvale. Some Africans follow traditional beliefs. Christians make up about 80 per cent of the population and are roughly divided between Protestants and Roman Catholics. Asians are mostly Muslims, with a few Hindus. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) is green, with a canton in the lower right having equal red, black and red vertical stripes, surmounted by an osprey in flight. The capital is Lusaka.

Recent History

Two British protectorates, founded in 1899 and 1900, were merged in 1911 to form Northern Rhodesia. In 1924 control of the territory passed from the British South Africa Company to the United Kingdom Government. In 1953 the protectorate joined with Southern Rhodesia (now Zimbabwe) and Nyasaland (now Malawi) to form the Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland, which was dissolved in December 1963. Northern Rhodesia became independent as Zambia on October 24th, 1964. Dr. Kenneth Kaunda, leader of the United National Independence Party (UNIP) since 1960 and Prime Minister since January 1964, became the country's first President.

A staunch opponent of racist policies, Kaunda has propagated his philosophy of Humanism as the basis for a peaceful society in Zambia. Since 1969 he has attempted to reduce the influence of tribal loyalties in political life. Before the proclamation of a one-party state in December 1972, Zambian politics were characterized by outbreaks of political violence, particularly on the Copperbelt. The decline of the main opposition party, the African National Congress (ANC), and internal disputes in the governing UNIP led to the formation of the United Progressive Party (UPP) in 1971, but it was banned in 1972 and many of its leaders detained. However, the country united to face the potentially crippling effect of the closure of the border with (Southern) Rhodesia in 1973.

The Zambian Government has consistently supported African liberation movements and by 1973 these groups posed a substantial threat to Rhodesia's border. Guerrilla activity increased following the border closure in 1973, leading to more tension with Rhodesia. In 1976 Zambia declared its support for the Patriotic Front, led by Robert Mugabe and Joshua Nkomo, and subsequently denounced the Rhodesian internal settlement of March 1978. In 1979 Rhodesian actions, including a commando attack on the Tazara railway and the suspension of emergency maize shipments, increased the food shortages produced by the failure of the 1979 maize harvest.

In October 1978 Kaunda was nominated by the UNIP as sole presidential candidate, following its approval of constitutional changes which effectively eliminated all opposition. The presidential elections, together with elections for the National Assembly, were held in December 1978 and, against a background of severe economic difficulties, Kaunda was convincingly returned.

With the establishment of an independent Zimbabwe in 1980, many Zambians looked forward to an improvement in their economic conditions and, in particular, to an end to the prolonged and severe shortages of staple commodities. Discontent with their continuation led to trouble with the trade unions and, in October 1980, to an attempted coup in which several prominent businessmen and UNIP members were allegedly involved. Many arrests followed, including those of four senior government officials and the head of the Air Force. Kaunda accused South Africa and "a number of foreign countries" of promoting the plot. In late 1980 and early 1981, several senior army officers were replaced and Cabinet reshuffles carried out. In January 1981 17 trade union leaders were expelled from the UNIP, prompting strikes in the Copperbelt mining area. They were reinstated in April. Further strikes in July, demanding pay parity with expatriate workers and an end to food shortages, led to the arrest of several trade unionists, including Frederick Chiluba, Chairman of the Zambia Congress of Trade Unions.

Government

A one-party state was proclaimed in December 1972 and inaugurated by a new Constitution in August 1973. Legislative power is held by the unicameral National Assembly, with 135 members: 10 nominated by the President and 125 elected for five years by universal adult suffrage, with up to three candidates per constituency. There is also an advisory House of Chiefs (27 members) to represent traditional tribal authorities. Executive power is held by the President, elected by popular vote at the same time as the Assembly. He appoints a Cabinet, led by the Prime Minister, to conduct the administration. The sole authorized party is the UNIP, led by the President. The highest policy-making body is the UNIP's Central Committee (25 members), to which the Cabinet is subordinate. Zambia comprises nine provinces, each administered by a Cabinet Minister.

Defence

The total strength of armed forces in July 1981 was 15,500, with 14,000 in the army and 1,500 in the air force. The police force numbered 6,250 and paramilitary forces 1,200. Military service is voluntary. There is also a National Defence Force responsible to the UNIP.

Economic Affairs

The basis of the Zambian economy is the mining of copper and cobalt, which provide 95 per cent of Zambia's foreign exchange. In 1971 the Government acquired a 51 per cent share in the mines, reorganized the structure of the industry and in 1973 took full control of the two largest copper mining groups. Production of smelter copper fell from 747,000 metric tons in 1969 to 583,400 tons in 1979, rising to 609,935 tons in 1980 but declining again in 1981 to 564,000 tons. Price fluctuations, transport problems and a high rate of loss of skilled expatriate manpower were major factors in the production decline. High cobalt prices in 1979 led to an expansion in production to 3,270 metric tons, and again in 1980 to 3,310 tons. However, market forces pushed prices down in 1980 and 1981. Zinc, lead, manganese, coal, gold and selenium are also mined, and a mineral exploration programme has been launched to prospect for chromium, nickel, iron, tin, tantalite, uranium, petroleum and gemstones.

Although over 70 per cent of the population is engaged in agriculture, the inadequate expansion of food production, which derives mainly from a few large-scale commercial farmers, has necessitated increasing imports of basic foodstuffs, which have been a persistently adverse factor in Zambia's balance of payments position. In May 1980 the Government launched a K400 million programme aimed at making the country self-sufficient in food by 1990. Agricultural producer prices were raised by an average 26 per cent in August 1981 to encourage increased output. Local large-scale wheat production and expansion of sugar cultivation and processing began in 1975. The chief cash products are maize, cattle, groundnuts and tobacco. Droughts adversely affected the 1979 and 1980 maize harvests, producing serious food shortages and increased reliance on imports. Better conditions in 1981 produced a record harvest of over 650,000 metric tons.

Since 1968 the important sectors of the economy have been put under the control of state corporations and socialist measures have been steadily introduced. At the end of 1978 President Kaunda announced a series of reforms to the Zambia Industrial and Mining Corporation (ZIMCO), designed to improve the effectiveness and efficiency of the industrial and commercial sector. Plans to restructure the nation's copper industry were announced in May 1981. With effect from March 1982, the two government-owned mining companies, Nchanga Consolidated Copper Mines and Roan Consolidated Mines, were to be merged into Zambia Consolidated Copper Mines.

Zambia struggled to comply with UN sanctions against Rhodesia, although this necessitated great expenditure on alternative transport and communication routes. In 1977 sanctions against Rhodesia cost Zambia an estimated K880 million. The dislocation of trade precipitated the worst crisis in the Zambian economy since independence, with G.D.P. declining by 4 per cent in 1977 and stagnating the following year, followed by further declines of 10 per cent, 3 per cent, and 2 per cent in 1979, 1980 and 1981 respectively. Zambia was forced to reopen the rail border with Rhodesia in October 1978. The currency was devalued by 20 per cent in July 1976 and by 10 per cent in March 1978, in an attempt to reduce the balance of payments deficit. The recovery in copper prices in 1979, which enabled Zambia's two mining groups to return to profitability, was only temporary, and the mines returned to loss-making in 1980 and 1981.

In March 1978 a two-year credit of K357 million was negotiated with the IMF. The loan terms provided for a 10 per cent devaluation of the currency, a reduction in the 1978/79 budget deficit, an incomes policy and reduced government borrowing. By the end of 1978 indebtedness to foreign creditors was estimated at K550 million, and in January 1979 and 1980 stringent budgets were introduced.

In January 1981 exchange controls were further tightened and the Government announced that it was taking "immediate steps" to reduce shortages of consumer goods, create employment and stabilize development. The 1981 budget maintained high levels of agricultural subsidies and reduced personal taxation, and the 1982 budget aimed to launch an export-led recovery of the economy. A three-year credit of SDR 800 million was agreed with the IMF in April 1981, with remarkably few economic policy conditions, to compensate Zambia for low copper and cobalt prices and rising fuel costs. In December 1981 Zambia's balance of payments arrears exceeded K600 million.

Zambia's Third National Development Plan (TNDP) was launched in late 1979, covering the period to 1984. The Plan envisaged total investment expenditure of K3,354 million, of which about one-third would come from foreign lenders. High priorities were assigned to technological development, agricultural production and the reduction of disparities between urban and rural sector incomes. The TNDP set an annual G.D.P. growth target of 6 per cent.

Transport and Communications

Zambia Railways connect Lusaka and the Copperbelt towns, Ndola and Kitwe, to the Zaire rail system. Following Rhodesia's unilateral declaration of independence in 1965, Zambia sought to develop a transport and communication network outside the control of the white-ruled south, diversifying its trade routes through Malawi, Mozambique and Tanzania. The existing Great North Road to Dar es Salaam has been supplemented by two pipelines from Ndola to Dar es Salaam, and the Tanzania-Zambia railway (Tazara), built with Chinese aid, was opened in October 1975. Air, road and rail links to the south were fully restored following the arrival of a British Governor in Rhodesia in December 1979, prior to the creation of an independent Zimbabwe. In 1980 work began on the reconstruction of road bridges destroyed by Rhodesian commandos in October 1979. There is an international airport at Lusaka and work is in progress to extend other airports. Zambia Airways provides domestic and inter-continental links.

Social Welfare

The Department of Labour and Social Services is responsible for relief of distress, care of the aged, protection of children, adoption and probation services. It gives grants for group welfare services including voluntary schemes. A form of pension is granted to the indigent aged. In 1978 Zambia had 82 hospitals and 676 rural health centres, with 20,740 beds. In 1980 there were 689 physicians in government service.

Education

Between 1964 and 1979 enrolment in schools increased by more than 260 per cent; in 1979 there were 985,528 pupils at primary schools and 85,643 at state secondary schools. There are plans to introduce compulsory education. In the 1980 budget, education received almost K125 million. The University of Zambia has capacity for 5,000 students. Student intake has risen from 312 in 1966 to over 4,000 in 1979, including part-time and correspondence students. There are 14 teacher training colleges. Zambianization of the teaching force is one of the main objectives of government education policy. Literacy was estimated at 35 per cent in 1979.

Tourism

The numerous lakes, Victoria Falls, Kafue and Luangwa Valley game reserves, as well as the climate, attract an ever-increasing tourist traffic. Game-watching, camping, fishing and water-sports are available, while there are a number of excellent hotels and motels. In 1981 over 110,000 tourists visited Zambia. Earnings from tourism were estimated at K35 million.

Public Holidays

1982: May 1st (Labour Day), May 25th (African Freedom Day, anniversary of OAU's foundation), July 6th (Heroes' Day), July 7th (Unity Day), August 3rd (Farmers' Day), October 24th (Independence Day), December 25th (Christmas Day).

1983: January 1st (New Year's Day), March (Youth Day), April 1st-4th (Easter).

Coins: 1, 2, 5, 10, 20 and 50 ngwee.

Notes: 50 ngwee; 1, 2, 5, 10 and 20 kwacha.

Exchange rates (December 1981): £1 sterling = 1.6875 kwacha; U.S. $1 = 87.73 ngwee.

100 Zambian kwacha = £59.26 = $113.99.

Note: The Zambian kwacha ("dawn") was introduced in January 1968, replacing the Zambian pound (Z£) at the rate of Z£1 = 2 kwacha. From September 1949 the Zambian (formerly Rhodesian) pound had been valued at U.S. $2.80, so the initial value of the kwacha was $1.40 ($1 = 71.43 ngwee). Despite the devaluation of the U.S. dollar in December 1971, this remained the central exchange rate until February 1973, with a market rate of 1 kwacha = $1.3987 from December 1972. From February 1973 to July 1976 the central rate was 1 kwacha = $1.5556 ($1 = 64.29 ngwee) and the market rate 1 kwacha = $1.5541 ($1 = 64.35 ngwee). In July 1976 the kwacha's link with the U.S. dollar was ended and the currency was pegged to the IMF Special Drawing Right (based on a weighted "basket" of currencies) at a mid-point of 1 kwacha = 1.0848 SDRs (1 SDR = 92.184 ngwee), then equal to $1.2429 ($1 = 80.45 ngwee), representing a devaluation of 20.1 per cent. The average value of the kwacha was $1.4019 in 1976 and $1.2675 in 1977. In March 1978 the kwacha was devalued by a further 10 per cent to 0.976311 SDR (1 SDR = 1.024264 kwacha), then equal to $1.2016. The average value of the kwacha was $1.2307 in 1978, $1.2621 in 1979 and $1.2682 in 1980. In terms of sterling, the kwacha was valued at 11s. 8d. or 58.33p (£1 = 1.714 kwacha) from January 1968 to August 1971; and at 53.73p (£1 = 1.861 kwacha) from December 1971 to June 1972.

THE CONSTITUTION

A new Constitution was drawn up and received Presidential assent in August 1973. Its provisions are as follows:

The President*: The President of the Republic of Zambia will be Head of State and Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces. His powers include the appointment of a Prime Minister, a Secretary-General of the Party, an Attorney-General, a Director of Public Prosecutions, a Chief Justice and judges of the Supreme Court. Presidential nominations will not be valid unless they are supported by at least 200 registered voters from each of Zambia's nine provinces. There will be no limitation placed on the length of the term of office of the President. He will be head of the United National Independence Party (UNIP). The President is elected by popular vote at the same time as the National Assembly.

The Prime Minister: Appointment will be by the President and the Prime Minister will be the Leader of Government Business. He is to be an ex-officio member of the UNIP Central Committee.

The Secretary-General: He will be appointed by the President and must be an ex-officio member of the Cabinet. He will be responsible for the administration of UNIP.

The Central Committee: The new Constitution provides for a Central Committee for the only legal party, the United National Independence Party (UNIP). It will consist of not more than 25 members, 20 to be elected at the Party's General Conference, held every five years, and three to be nominated by the President. It has more powers than the Cabinet. It is to consist of eight sub-committees, whose members are appointed by the President from among the Central Committee and National Council members. All members must be full-time officials of UNIP's National Headquarters.

The Cabinet: This will be appointed by the President who may nominate non-elected ministers and appoint others from elected members of the National Assembly, in consultation with the Prime Minister. The decision of the Cabinet is to be subordinate to that of the UNIP Central Committee.

Legislature: Parliament will consist of the President and a National Assembly of 125 elected members. The President will have power to nominate up to 10 additional members of the National Assembly. There will be a Speaker and a Deputy Speaker. The normal life of Parliament is five years. To become law, a bill requires Presidential assent.

The House of Chiefs: The Constitution provides for a House of Chiefs numbering 27, four each from the Northern, Western, Southern and Eastern Provinces, three each from the North-Western, Luapula and Central Provinces and two from the Copperbelt Province. The number of representatives from Lusaka Province, created in December 1975, has yet to be decided. It may submit resolutions to be debated by the Assembly and consider those matters referred to it by the President.

Judiciary: The Attorney General will be appointed by the President, in consultation with the Prime Minister, and will be the principal legal adviser to the Government. The President will appoint the Director of Public Prosecutions who must vacate his office when he reaches the age of 60. The Supreme Court of Zambia will be the final Court of Appeal. The Chief Justice and other judges will be appointed by the President. Subsidiary to the Supreme Court will be the High Court which will have unlimited jurisdiction to hear and determine any civil or criminal proceedings under any Zambian law.

Citizenship: The qualifying period for Zambian citizenship will be increased from five to ten years. Every citizen of Zambia who is over the age of 18, and a registered voter, may vote.

Bill of Rights: The Constitution provides for a Bill of Rights in which the fundamental freedoms and rights of the individual are guaranteed. The President has the power to proclaim a State of Emergency at any time when he feels the security of the State is threatened.

* In October 1978 a conference of UNIP members approved the following constitutional changes: all Presidential candidates must have been members of UNIP for five years prior to nomination, must not have a prison record and must be "disciplined".

Total length of railways in Zambia is 1,297 km. Zambia planned to spend K11.4m. on 235 wagons for use on the Benguela railway, running through Zambia and Zaire to the Angolan port of Lobito, for which a rehabilitation programme was agreed by the three countries in 1981.

Tanzania-Zambia Railway Authority (TAZARA): Head Office: P.O.B. 2834, Dar es Salaam; Branch Office: P.O.B. 31784, Lusaka; construction work on the 1,860 km. of railway line to link Dar es Salaam in Tanzania and Kapiri Mposhi, north of Lusaka, began in 1970 and the line was officially opened in 1975. Of the total length, 890 km. is in Zambia. The project received technical and financial assistance from the People's Republic of China and costs were estimated at K300 million; passenger traffic reportedly ceased in April 1981 because of lack of funds; Chair. B. M. MONZE; Gen. Man. CHARLES NXYIRENDA.

ROADS

There is a total of 36,415 km. of which 12,289 are main roads. The main arterial roads run from Beit Bridge to

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of Zimbabwe is a land-locked state in southern Africa, with Mozambique to the east, Zambia to the north-west, Botswana to the south-west and South Africa to the south. The climate is tropical, modified considerably by altitude. The official language is English; the main African languages are Chishona and Sindebele. Most of the Africans follow traditional beliefs, while the Asians are Muslim or Hindu. About 20 per cent of the population are Christian. The flag has seven horizontal stripes of green, gold, red, black, red, gold and green, with a white triangle, bearing a red five-pointed star on which a gold "Zimbabwe bird" is superimposed, at the hoist. It was planned to change the name of the capital, Salisbury, to Harare during 1982.

Recent History

In 1923 responsibility for Southern Rhodesia (now Zimbabwe) was transferred from the British South Africa Company to the United Kingdom Government and the territory became a British colony. It had full self-government (except for African interests and some other matters) under an administration controlled by European settlers. African voting rights were restricted.

In 1953 the colony was merged with two British protectorates, Northern Rhodesia and Nyasaland (now Zambia and Malawi), to form the Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland. Sir Godfrey Huggins (later the Viscount Malvern), Prime Minister of Southern Rhodesia from 1933 to 1953, became the first Prime Minister of the Federation; he was succeeded by Sir Roy Welensky in 1956. In Southern Rhodesia itself, Garfield Todd was Prime Minister from 1953 until opposition to his liberal policies forced his resignation in 1958, when Sir Edgar Whitehead came to power. Meanwhile, white immigration, mainly from Britain and South Africa, had led to an increase in the European population from about 80,000 in 1945 to over 200,000 in 1958.

A new constitution, ending most of the United Kingdom's legal controls (except for foreign affairs), came into effect in 1962. This constitution provided for a limited African franchise and could have led ultimately to black majority rule. At elections in December 1962 Sir Edgar Whitehead lost power to the Rhodesian Front (RF), a coalition of white opposition groups committed to maintaining racial segregation. The Front's leader, Winston Field, became Prime Minister. The Federation was dissolved in December 1963 as a result of successful African nationalist movements in the other member countries.

Meanwhile, African nationalists campaigned for an end to discrimination and for rapid progress to full democracy. The African National Congress, founded in 1934, was revived in 1957, with Joshua Nkomo as President. The Congress was banned in February 1959 but some of its members formed the National Democratic Party (NDP) in January 1960. Nkomo, although in exile, was elected President of the NDP in October 1960. When the NDP was banned in December 1961 Nkomo formed the Zimbabwe African People's Union (ZAPU). This was declared an unlawful organization in September 1962. ZAPU split in July 1963 and a breakaway group, led by the Rev. Ndabaningi Sithole, formed the Zimbabwe African National Union (ZANU) in August. Robert Mugabe became Secretary-General of ZANU.

In April 1964 Field resigned, accused of moving too slowly towards independence. He was replaced by his deputy, Ian Smith, who rejected British conditions for independence, including acceptance by the whole Rhodesian population and unimpeded progress to majority rule. ZANU was banned in August 1964. After Northern Rhodesia became independent as Zambia in October 1964 Southern Rhodesia became generally (although not officially) known as Rhodesia. At elections in May 1965 the RF won all 50 European seats in the legislature. After more unsuccessful negotiations with the British Government, a state of emergency (to be renewed annually) was declared on November 5th. Smith made a unilateral declaration of independence (UDI) on November 11th 1965. The British-appointed Governor announced the Cabinet's dismissal but no effective steps were taken to remove it from power. The Smith regime abrogated the 1961 constitution and proclaimed a new one, naming the country Rhodesia. The Governor was replaced by Clifford Dupont, formerly Minister of External Affairs and Defence as "Acting Officer Administering the Government". The British Government regarded Rhodesia's independence as unconstitutional and illegal, and no other country formally recognized it.

The United Kingdom terminated all trading and other relations with Rhodesia, while the UN applied economic sanctions against the regime. Following a referendum in June 1969, Rhodesia was declared a republic in March 1970, with Dupont as the first President. The 1969 constitution provided for a bicameral Legislative Assembly comprising a 23-member Senate and a 66-member House of Assembly (50 Europeans and 16 Africans). The President had only formal powers and Smith remained Prime Minister. The RF won all 50 European seats in the House of Assembly in 1970, 1974 and 1977. President Dupont retired in December 1975 and was succeeded by John Wrathall, previously Deputy Prime Minister.

Both ZAPU and ZANU took up arms against the illegal Smith regime and African guerrilla groups were involved in clashes with Rhodesian security forces. Armed South African police were called in to assist the regime in 1967. The British Prime Minister, Harold Wilson, twice held negotiations with Ian Smith, in December 1966 and October 1968, but, despite British concessions, the talks proved abortive.

Attempts to reach a constitutional settlement acceptable to all parties ended in failure and sanctions continued to be applied (although it was subsequently revealed that many international companies circumvented the restrictions). In November 1971 the British and Rhodesian Governments agreed on draft proposals for a settlement, subject to their acceptability to the Rhodesian people "as a whole". In December the African National Council (ANC), led by Bishop Abel Muzorewa, was formed to coordinate opposition to the plan. The British commission which visited Rhodesia in 1972 reported that the proposals were unacceptable to the majority of Africans. The introduction of more discriminatory legislation was accompanied by increased activity by African nationalist guerrilla groups against whom a major operation was initiated by the regime. The guerrilla war officially began in December 1972 following a guerrilla attack on a farmhouse in north-eastern Rhodesia.

In 1974 fiercer guerrilla attacks, the impending independence from Portugal of neighbouring Mozambique and cooler relations with South Africa caused a dramatic change in the situation. In December a summit was held in Lusaka between three African Presidents and leaders of four nationalist organizations (including ZAPU, ZANU and the ANC), resulting in agreement for a border ceasefire, conditional on the release of African political detainees and a constitutional conference to be held in 1975. The African organizations agreed to unite within the ANC, with Bishop Muzorewa as President, and in August 1975 held abortive constitutional talks with the Rhodesian Government. In September the ANC split into rival factions, led by Bishop Muzorewa and Joshua Nkomo. Constitutional talks between the Government and the Nkomo faction began in December 1975 but broke down in March 1976. British proposals for majority rule by early 1978 were also rejected in March.

In April 1976 the U.S. Secretary of State, Dr. Henry Kissinger, entered lengthy negotiations with the British Government, the Presidents of Botswana, Mozambique, Tanzania and Zambia, the South African Prime Minister and Ian Smith. In September, under pressure from South Africa, Smith announced his Government's acceptance of proposals leading to majority rule within two years.

The British Government convened the Geneva Conference, which opened in October, to implement the transition to majority rule. It was attended by delegations representing the RF, led by Ian Smith, the African nationalists and the British Government, under a British chairman, Ivor Richard. The nationalist delegations were led by Bishop Muzorewa, the Rev. Sithole, Joshua Nkomo and Robert Mugabe (leader of ZANU's armed forces, based in Mozambique). Nkomo and Mugabe, who claimed the support of the guerrillas, adopted a joint position as the Patriotic Front. Although an independence date not later than March 31st, 1978, was provisionally agreed, the Conference was adjourned in December after failing to agree on the composition of the proposed interim government.

In January 1977 negotiations resumed, and Angola, Botswana, Mozambique, Tanzania and Zambia (the "front-line" states) declared their support for the Patriotic Front. Ian Smith rejected British proposals for an interim administration and received a mandate from the RF to repeal racially discriminatory laws and to seek agreement with such African factions as he chose. Supported by the OAU, the Patriotic Front demanded in July 1977 that power be handed direct to them by the Rhodesian Government. A general election was held in August, with the RF retaining all 50 European seats. The black nationalist organizations refused to contest the eight African seats.

In September 1977 the United Kingdom and the U.S.A. proposed a seven-point plan for an interim administration, leading to independence in 1978, but negotiations failed to secure the agreement of the Rhodesian Government or the Patriotic Front. In November 1977 Ian Smith accepted the principle of universal adult suffrage and talks on an internal settlement were initiated with Bishop Muzorewa's United African National Council (UANC), the Sithole faction of the ANC and the Zimbabwe United People's Organization (ZUPO), led by Chief Jeremiah Chirau. These talks led to the signing of an internal settlement on March 3rd, 1978, providing for an interim power-sharing administration to prepare for independence on December 31st, 1978. The proposals were rejected by the Patriotic Front, which stated that it would continue the guerrilla war, and by the UN Security Council, which declared the settlement plan to be illegal and unacceptable.

In May 1978 the newly-created Executive Council, consisting of Smith, Sithole, Bishop Muzorewa and Chirau, ordered the release of all political detainees in an attempt to bring about a ceasefire. This met with little response from the Patriotic Front and, amid growing dissatisfaction with the interim administration among both Africans and Europeans, the United Kingdom and the U.S.A. tried unsuccessfully to convene a new all-party conference. Reports of talks held secretly in Zambia during August between Smith and Nkomo caused division among the "front-line" states and within the Patriotic Front leadership. Frequent clashes between Rhodesian security forces and Patriotic Front guerrillas, including Rhodesian attacks on ZAPU and ZANU bases in Zambia and Mozambique, resulted in the introduction of selective martial law in September. Meanwhile, President Wrathall died in August.

In January 1979 a "majority rule" constitution, containing entrenched safeguards for the white minority, was approved by the House of Assembly and endorsed by a referendum of European voters. The United Kingdom and the U.S.A. continued to call on all parties to accept the principle of UN-supervised elections as the basis for a viable settlement. However, the transitional Government proceeded with its arrangements for the transfer of powers. In April 1979 elections to the new House of Assembly (the country's first by universal adult suffrage) were held in two stages: first for 20 directly-elected European members (chosen by non-African voters only) and then for 72 African members (chosen by the whole electorate). The UANC emerged as the majority party, with 51 seats in the new House, while the RF won all 20 white seats. In May the existing white-dominated Legislative Assembly was dissolved and the new Parliament elected Josiah Gumede to be President. Bishop Muzorewa became Prime Minister of the country (renamed Zimbabwe Rhodesia) in June 1979. In accordance with the constitution, Muzorewa formed a government of "national unity", a coalition of parties in the new House, including European members (Ian Smith became Minister without Portfolio). International recognition was not forthcoming and UN sanctions continued to be applied on the grounds that the elections were not "free and fair".

New impetus for a lasting and acceptable settlement came following the Commonwealth Conference in Lusaka in August 1979, where the British Prime Minister, Margaret Thatcher, affirmed that the responsibility for the granting of legal independence to Rhodesia lay with the United Kingdom alone. The Commonwealth confirmed its commitment to majority rule, rejected the internal settlement as being defective in important aspects and called for a constitutional conference.

In September 1979 a Rhodesian Constitutional Conference was convened at Lancaster House in London under the chairmanship of Lord Carrington, and attended by delegations under Bishop Muzorewa and the joint leaders of the Patriotic Front, in an attempt to find an internationally-recognized solution. The Patriotic Front reluctantly agreed to special representation for the whites under the proposed new constitution, which was eventually accepted by both parties. During the talks the guerrilla war escalated and Rhodesian forces hit economic targets in neighbouring Zambia in October. However, complete agreement was reached on transitional arrangements in November and the details of a ceasefire were finalized the following month. On December 11th the Zimbabwe Rhodesia Parliament voted to renounce independence and revert to the status of a British colony, as Southern Rhodesia. Rebel rule, which had lasted just over 14 years, ended the next day when Parliament was dissolved, the President, Prime Minister and Cabinet resigned, and the British-appointed Governor, Lord Soames, arrived in Salisbury, temporarily vested with full executive and legislative authority during the transition to legal independence. The United Kingdom immediately lifted economic sanctions.

Lord Soames paved the way for fresh elections to a new House of Assembly by lifting the ban on the two wings of the Patriotic Front and ordering the release of most of the detainees held under the "emergency powers" laws. Under the terms of the ceasefire, Patriotic Front troops assembled in 16 areas under the control of a small Commonwealth Monitoring Force. By January 7th, 1980, nearly 20,000 men had arrived in the assembly areas. The election campaign was marred by factional violence and intimidation, and the ceasefire was briefly threatened by the anger of the Patriotic Front and the "front-line" states over the presence of South African troops in Rhodesia. However, elections were held in February (again in two stages) under the supervision of a British Electoral Commissioner. Robert Mugabe's ZANU-PF emerged as the largest single party, winning 57 of the 80 African seats. Joshua Nkomo's Patriotic Front won 20 seats and the UANC only three. In a separate poll of white voters, Ian Smith's RF won all 20 reserved seats. The new state of Zimbabwe became legally independent from Britain on April 18th, with the Rev. Canaan Banana as President and Robert Mugabe as Prime Minister at the head of a coalition Government including ZANU-PF and Patriotic Front members.

Despite the Government's attempts to balance gradual Africanization of Zimbabwean society with acceptance of existing white economic power and technical skills, record numbers of people, mainly whites, emigrated in 1980 and 1981. Zimbabwe severed diplomatic relations with South Africa in September 1980, but maintains the economic links on which both countries are dependent.

Following the war of independence, in which 27,000 people were killed, the only major disturbances of the peace were caused by factional differences between former guerrillas, prompted by tribal rivalries of the Shona and Ndebele. Relations remained uneasy between Robert Mugabe and Joshua Nkomo, particularly over the former's intention of eventually introducing a one-party state. Nkomo was demoted from the Ministry of Home Affairs to the post of Minister without Portfolio in a Cabinet reshuffle in January 1981, and Edgar Tekere, the outspoken Minister of Manpower Planning and Development, was dismissed; in August he also lost his position as Secretary-General of ZANU-PF. In February 1982 large illegal arms caches, discovered on Patriotic Front-owned land, were interpreted as part of a plot to overthrow Mugabe. The Cabinet was almost immediately reshuffled, with Nkomo and two Patriotic Front colleagues losing their posts. In March nine M.P.s of the Republican Front (the Rhodesian Front having changed its name in June 1981) resigned from the party over its unwillingness to co-operate with the Government.

Government

Under the terms of the 1980 Constitution (agreed upon by all parties at the Lancaster House talks), legislative power is vested in the bicameral Parliament, consisting of a House of Assembly and a Senate. The House has 100 members directly elected by universal adult suffrage from 80 "common roll" constituencies and 20 separate "white roll" constituencies. The Senate (with delaying powers only) has 40 members: 14 elected by the "common roll" members, 10 by the "white roll" members, 10 by the traditional House of Chiefs and six presidential nominees. Members of both Houses serve for five years (subject to dissolution). Executive authority is vested in the President, elected by Parliament for six years. In almost all matters the President acts on the advice of the Cabinet, led by the Prime Minister. The President appoints the Prime Minister and, on the latter's recommendation, other Ministers. The Cabinet must have the confidence of Parliament, to which it is responsible.

Defence

Total armed forces numbered 34,000 in July 1981: 33,000 in the army and 1,000 in the air force. When the integration of about 50,000 former guerrillas, from both Zanla (loyal to Robert Mugabe in the war of independence) and Zipra (loyal to Joshua Nkomo), into the security forces had been completed, in November 1981, total armed forces numbered 60,000; these were subsequently to be reduced to about 40,000. The estimated expenditure on defence in 1980/81 was Z.$280 million. Zimbabwe receives military aid and training from the United Kingdom and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea. Prime Minister Mugabe announced plans to create a people's militia during 1981.

Economic Affairs

Two-thirds of the labour force are involved in agriculture, which is an important provider of raw materials for industry and constituted 14 per cent of G.D.P. in 1980. Tobacco, maize, tea, cotton, groundnuts, potatoes and sugar are the main cash crops. Open trading on the world tobacco markets was resumed in early 1980 after its interruption by UN sanctions. Following disappointing prices for a low quality crop of 122,000 metric tons in 1980, a strict limit on production of 70,000 tons was introduced for 1981 and the high quality crop made tobacco Zimbabwe's largest foreign exchange earner that year. In recent years new crops, such as wheat, have been successfully introduced, and there is much stock raising. A record maize crop of 2.8 million metric tons was produced in 1981 after a 33 per cent increase in the area of cultivation in 1980. Zimbabwe is likely to become a major supplier of maize to southern African countries. Production was expected to be seriously affected by drought in 1982. The Government is proceeding with a programme of resettling African peasants on vacant and underexploited farms.

An estimated 6 per cent of the working population are employed in mining, which in 1980 contributed 8 per cent of G.D.P. Gold and nickel are the major mineral exports. Other minerals include copper, silver, cobalt, chromium ore, coal and asbestos. Despite sanctions, revenue from mining increased between 1969 and 1978, and since 1979 there has been growing exploitation of mineral reserves. The Government plans to create a Mineral Marketing Corporation to control the mining industry, with the exception of gold. Mining and agriculture provide about 70 per cent of foreign exchange earnings.

In 1980 manufacturing employed about 15 per cent of the labour force and contributed 24 per cent of G.D.P. The most important sectors by gross output value are food processing, metals, engineering and textiles. The dam on Lake Kariba provides most of the country's electricity, and a large thermal power station, costing an estimated Z.$565 million, is under construction at Wankie.

Between 1965 and 1974 widespread breaking of UN sanctions produced a fall in unemployment and a real increase in G.D.P. of 83 per cent. However, the Rhodesian economy was profoundly affected by the international recession in 1975 and real G.D.P. declined by 1 per cent in 1975, 3.4 per cent in 1976, 6.9 per cent in 1977 and 2.5 per cent in 1978. Exchange rate stability was maintained for 25 years until the strained balance of payments position led to devaluations of the Rhodesian dollar in September 1975, in October 1977 and in April 1978, a cumulative depreciation of about 15 per cent against the U.S. dollar.

Legal independence provided a stimulus to all aspects of the economy. The UN Security Council lifted trade sanctions at the end of 1979, and this, combined with the easing of transport and trade restrictions caused by the war, enabled Zimbabwe to participate fully in international trade. Exports increased by 28 per cent and imports by 45 per cent in 1980, creating balance of payments difficulties for Zimbabwe. The G.D.P. growth rate was 14 per cent in 1980, the first improvement in real terms for five years, but fell to 8 per cent in 1981 without the once-only benefits which followed the ending of the war. Problems which threaten continued growth include transport difficulties and the departure of Europeans whose skills cannot yet be filled by suitably qualified Africans, although as much as 40 per cent of the adult labour force may be unemployed. The Government planned to create 100,000 new jobs in the formal sector of employment during 1981. Minimum industrial and agricultural wages were raised in January 1982 in a measure to redistribute the wealth of the country. Plans to expand the economy of Zimbabwe also depend on the procuring of sufficient finance, particularly from foreign governments. A three-year economic plan, aiming for average annual growth of 8 per cent, was announced in February 1981, but would rely heavily on external financing. In March the Zimbabwe Conference on Reconstruction and Development (ZIMCORD) received pledges of Z.$1,280 million.

Transport and Communications

In January 1980 road and air links with Zambia and Mozambique were restored following 14 years of comparative isolation. The rail links with Beira and Maputo in Mozambique, important export outlets, also opened later in the year. In addition, Zimbabwe has rail links with South Africa, Botswana and Zambia. There are nearly 79,000 km. of roads, of which over 8,500 km. are main roads. International and domestic air services connect most of the larger towns. South African Airways, the only major international airline serving the country at the time of the Lancaster House agreement, was joined by many other airlines from January 1980. In 1981 The Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference (SADCC) decided to spend U.S. $111 million on developing Salisbury airport to reduce dependence on South African transport facilities in the region.

Social Welfare

At independence there was no statutory provision for social security, though government and industrial schemes exist. The incoming Government, under Robert Mugabe, was committed to major changes in taxation to finance comprehensive social security schemes. There is a free national health service for all persons earning less than Z.$150 per month. In 1981 there were about 672 hospitals and clinics, and 1,200 doctors. A programme to expand health facilities in rural areas was in progress.

Education

Education in Zimbabwe is non-racial at all levels. Estimated expenditure on education in 1981/82 was Z.$290 million. All primary education is free, but not compulsory. Between 1979 and 1981 the numbers of primary school pupils increased from 819,128 to 1,680,143, and secondary school pupils from 73,540 to 144,735. The expansion has required the inception of a four-year crash teacher training programme and the recruitment of teachers from other countries. The University of Zimbabwe, at Salisbury, provides multi-racial higher education and in 1981 enrolment of students totalled 2,525.

Tourism

The principal tourist attractions are the Victoria Falls, the Kariba Dam and the Wankie Game Reserve and National Park. Zimbabwe Ruins, near Fort Victoria, and World's View in the Matopos Hills are of special interest. In the Eastern Districts around Umtali there is trout fishing and climbing. The number of tourists visiting the country fell from 339,210 in 1972 to 65,268 in 1979, because of the escalating security problems. With the return to peace, tourist entries rose to 227,196 in 1980, and about 300,000 in 1981.

Public Holidays

1982: May 1st (Day of the International Working Class), May 6th (Heroes' Day), May 25th (African Liberation Day), June 1st (International Children's Day), June 15th (Pakawira Day), August 8th (ZANU Day), August 9th (Nyadzonya Day), November 23rd (Rededication Day), December 25th, 26th (Christmas and Boxing Day).

1983: March 8th (International Women's Day), March 18th (Thiupepo Day), April 28th (Chimurenjo Day).

FINANCE

100 cents = 1 Zimbabwe dollar (Z.$).
Coins: ½, 1, 2½, 5, 10, 20 and 25 cents.

Notes: 1, 2, 5 and 10 dollars.

Unofficial exchange rates (December 1981): £1 sterling = Z.$1.384; U.S. $1 = 71.9 Zimbabwe cents;
Z.$100 = £72.26 = U.S. $139.00.

Note: The Rhodesian dollar (R$), renamed the Zimbabwe Rhodesia dollar in June 1979 and the Zimbabwe dollar in April 1980, was introduced in February 1970, replacing the Rhodesian pound (R£) at the rate of R£1 = R$2. From September 1949 the value of the Rhodesian pound was U.S. $2.80, so the initial value of the Rhodesian dollar was U.S. $1.40 (U.S. $1 = 71.43 Rhodesian cents). This valuation remained in effect until August 1971. Between December 1971 and February 1973 the Rhodesian dollar was valued at U.S. $1.52 (U.S. $1 = 65.79 Rhodesian cents). In February 1973 the Rhodesian dollar's value was fixed at U.S. $1.6889 (U.S. $1 = 59.21 Rhodesian cents) but this was subsequently adjusted. In September 1975 the median rate was fixed at R$1 = U.S. $1.60 but this was later revised. The currency was devalued in October 1977 and in April 1978, when an exchange rate of R$1 = U.S. $1.44 was established. The average value of the Rhodesian (later in Zimbabwe) dollar in U.S. dollars was: 1.5984 in 1976; 1.5919 in 1977; 1.4764 in 1978; 1.4709 in 1979; 1.5561 in 1980. In terms of sterling, the exchange rate between February 1970 and June 1972 was R$1 = 11s. 8d. or 58.33p (£1 = R$1.714).

THE CONSTITUTION

The first republican constitution was adopted on November 29th, 1969, and took effect on March 2nd, 1970. The first "majority rule" constitution became effective on June 1st, 1979. This was superseded by a Constitution for Zimbabwe agreed on during the Lancaster House talks and placed before the British Parliament in December 1979. This came into effect on April 18th, 1980.

The following is a summary of the provisions of the Constitution:

THE REPUBLIC

Zimbabwe is a sovereign republic and the Constitution is the supreme law.

DECLARATION OF RIGHTS

The declaration of rights guarantees the fundamental rights and freedoms of the individual, regardless of race, tribe, place of origin, political opinions, colour, creed or sex. The following rights and freedoms are protected: the right to life; the right to personal liberty; protection from slavery and forced labour; protection from inhuman treatment; protection from deprivation of property; protection from arbitrary search or entry; the right to protection of the law; freedom of conscience; freedom of expression; freedom of assembly and association; freedom of movement; freedom from discrimination.

THE PRESIDENT

Each candidate for the Presidency shall be nominated by not fewer than ten members of the House of Assembly; if only one candidate is nominated he shall be declared to be elected without the necessity of a ballot. Otherwise, a ballot shall be held amongst an electoral college consisting of the members of the House of Assembly and the Senate. The President shall hold office for six years and shall be eligible for re-election. The President shall be Head of State and Commander-in-Chief of the Defence Forces.

PARLIAMENT

Parliament shall consist of a Senate and a House of Assembly. The Senate shall consist of 40 Senators: 14 shall be elected by an electoral college consisting of those members of the House of Assembly elected by voters registered on the common roll and ten by those members elected by voters on the separate white roll; five shall be Chiefs in Mashonaland elected by an electoral college consisting of those Chiefs in Mashonaland who are members of the Council of Chiefs, and five shall be Chiefs in Matabeleland, similarly elected; the remaining six members shall be appointed by the President. The House of Assembly shall consist of 100 members, to be elected by universal adult suffrage from 80 common roll constituencies and 20 white roll constituencies. The life of the Parliament shall ordinarily be five years.

Amendments to the Constitution shall not be deemed to have been duly passed by Parliament unless at the final vote they receive the approval of not less than two-thirds of the members of the Senate and not fewer than 70 members of the House of Assembly. In addition, amendments to entrenched clauses relating to the representation of whites require the approval of all the members of the House of Assembly.

THE EXECUTIVE

Executive authority shall vest in the President, who acts on the advice of the Cabinet. The President shall appoint as Prime Minister the person who, in his opinion, is best able to command the support of the majority of members of the House of Assembly. The President, acting on the advice of the Prime Minister, shall appoint other Ministers and Deputy Ministers, to be members of the Cabinet.

OTHER PROVISIONS

An Ombudsman shall be appointed by the President, acting on the advice of the Judicial Service Commission, to investigate complaints against actions taken by employees of the Government or of a local authority.

Chiefs shall be appointed by the President, and shall form a Council of Chiefs from their number, in accordance with customary principles of succession.

Other provisions relate to the Judicature, Defence and Police Forces, public service and finance.

THE GOVERNMENT

HEAD OF STATE

President: REV. CANAAN SODINDO BANANA (sworn in April 18th, 1980).

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

The legal system is Roman-Dutch, based on the system which was in force in the Cape of Good Hope on June 10th, 1891, as modified by subsequent legislation.

The Supreme Court with appellate jurisdiction consists of the Chief Justice and three Judges of Appeal (with provision for the designation of an additional judge if necessary).

The High Court consists of the Chief Justice, the Judge President and seven other judges. Below the High Court are Magistrates' Courts with both civil and criminal jurisdiction presided over by full-time professional magistrates.

In February 1981 the Customary Law and Primary Courts Bill was passed, which planned to integrate the customary law courts of rural areas into the country's formal legal system.

Attorney-General: GODFREY CHIDYAUŠIKU.

Chief Justice: Hon. Mr. Justice J. C. R. FIELDSEND.

Supreme Court Judges: Hon. Mr. Justice LEO S. BARON, Hon. Mr. Justice TELFORD GEORGES.

Judge President: Hon. Mr. C. E. L. BECK.
